

15
Volume

German
Linguistic and Cultural Studies

G
L
C
S

Niamh O'Mahony

German-Irish Corporate Relationships

The Cultural Dimension

Peter Lang

Contents

Acknowledgements	13
Abbreviations	15
Figures and tables	17
Introduction	19
Chapter 1
Culture and the cross-national context	23
1.1. Introduction	23
1.2. Definition of culture	23
1.3. The characteristics of culture	25
1.3.1. Culture as a problem-solving device	25
1.3.2. Culture as the personality of a society	25
1.3.3. Culture as a group construct	25
1.3.4. Culture is for the most part acquired	26
1.3.5. Culture is not a straitjacket	27
1.3.6. The influence of the past	27
1.3.7. Culture is an elusive concept	28
1.3.8. The various layers of culture	28
1.4. The role of culture in cross-national management research	32
1.4.1. Culture-free/convergency approaches	33
1.4.2. Culture-bound/divergency approaches	38
1.4.3. Convergence revisited or persistent divergence?	48
1.5. Conclusion	50

Chapter 2

German and Irish business culture compared and contrasted 53

2.1.	Introduction	53
2.2.	National culture: the Hofstedian dimensions	54
2.3.	National business culture and national institutional frameworks	55
2.3.1.	The legal system	60
2.3.2.	The role of the State in the business environment	65
2.3.3.	The financing of business	79
2.3.4.	Industrial relations in Ireland and Germany: voluntarism versus legal regulation	85
2.3.5.	Management in Ireland and Germany	95
2.3.6.	Training and education	97
2.4.	Conclusion	109

Chapter 3

Parent company–foreign subsidiary relationships 113

3.1.	Introduction	113
3.2.	The basis of the parent company–subsidiary relationship	113
3.3.	Factors affecting the degree of parent company control and coordination of subsidiary activities	114
3.3.1.	Internal company factors: parent company characteristics	115
3.3.2.	Internal company factors: subsidiary company characteristics	125
3.3.3.	Host country environmental factors	130
3.4.	Instruments of control	131
3.4.1.	Operational control instruments	131
3.4.2.	Control over strategic resources	131

3.4.3.	The imposition of standards by the parent company	132
3.4.4.	Performance-monitoring instruments	133
3.4.5.	Personnel-policy instruments	134
3.4.6.	Communication instruments	138
3.4.7.	Organisational culture	139
3.5.	Conclusion	142

Chapter 4
The methodology adopted for the empirical survey		145
4.1.	Introduction	145
4.2.	A question of terminology	145
4.3.	Sample selection procedure	146
4.3.1.	Sample Group A: German parent companies and their Irish operations	146
4.3.2.	Sample Group B: Irish parent companies and their German operations	153
4.4.	Contacting the sample companies and arranging interviews	155
4.4.1.	The German parent companies and German operations of Irish parent companies August–September 1996	155
4.4.2.	The Irish parent companies May–July 1999	155
4.4.3.	The Irish operations May–July 1999	156
4.4.4.	Comment	156
4.5.	Interview format	156
4.6.	Language	157
4.7.	Reasons for choosing the interview as a data collection instrument	157
4.8.	Presentation of the questionnaires	158
4.8.1.	Questionnaire 1	158
4.8.2.	Questionnaire 2	159
4.9.	Limitations of the sample results	159

Chapter 5
German parent companies and their Irish operations
(Sample Group A): evidence from the interviews 161

5.1.	Introduction	161
5.2.	The German parent companies	162
5.2.1.	Profile of the German parent companies	162
5.2.2.	The ‘Germanness’ of the German parent companies	164
5.2.3.	Profile of the German parent-company interviewees	169
5.3.	The Irish operations	175
5.3.1.	Profile of the Irish-operation interviewees	175
5.3.2.	Profile of the Irish operations	181
5.4.	The relationship between German parent companies and their Irish operations: coordination and control	197
5.4.1.	Operational control	197
5.4.2.	Control over strategic resources	199
5.4.3.	The imposition of standards	202
5.4.4.	Performance-monitoring instruments	206
5.4.5.	Personnel-policy instruments	208
5.4.6.	Communication instruments	210
5.4.7.	Organisational culture	213
5.5.	Conclusion: German influences in the Irish operations	218

Chapter 6
Irish parent companies and their German operations
(Sample Group B): evidence from the interviews 221

6.1.	Introduction	221
6.2.	The Irish parent companies	222
6.2.1.	Profile of the Irish parent companies	222
6.2.2.	The ‘Irishness’ of the Irish parent companies	224
6.2.3.	Profile of the Irish parent-company interviewees	230
6.3.	The German operations	235

6.3.1.	Profile of the German-operation interviewees	235
6.3.2.	Profile of the German operations	241
6.4.	The relationship between Irish parent companies and German operations: coordination and control	249
6.4.1.	Operational control	249
6.4.2.	Control over strategic resources	250
6.4.3.	The imposition of standards	253
6.4.4.	Performance-monitoring instruments	256
6.4.5.	Personnel-policy instruments	259
6.4.6.	Communication instruments	263
6.4.7.	Organisational culture	264
6.5.	Conclusion: Irish influences in the German operations	268

Chapter 7

Cultural differences between the Irish and the Germans: evidence from the interviews 271

7.1.	Introduction	271
7.2.	Cultural differences pertaining to Uncertainty Avoidance	271
7.2.1.	Approach to time	272
7.2.2.	Flexibility	277
7.2.3.	Business is serious business	285
7.2.4.	German perfectionism	287
7.3.	Cultural differences pertaining to Power Distance	288
7.3.1.	Authority	289
7.3.2.	Formality	293
7.3.3.	Work and non-work life: continuum versus compartmentalisation	296
7.3.4.	Admitting mistakes	300
7.4.	Conclusion	301

Conclusion
German–Irish corporate relationships: the cultural dimension	303
Appendix I: Summary of Dobry’s model	309
Appendix II: Preliminary questionnaire, August 1995	311
Appendix III: Survey questionnaires (English-language versions)	313
Bibliography	337
Index	349