

Contents

Preface — VII

Introduction: Persuasion, rhetoric, and the theory of emotions — 1

Preliminaries — 1

Peitho, visuality, and emotions — 3

Emotions, cognitions, and rhetorical argument — 8

Outline of the book — 21

1 Vision and emotions in Gorgias — 24

1.1 Preliminaries — 24

1.2 Vision and the generation of emotions in the Encomium of Helen — 26

1.3 Emotions, vision, and cognitive impairment — 38

1.4 The fabrication of likenesses: visual arts, speech, and emotions — 43

1.5 Helen's eyes, Gorgias' epideixis, and the poets — 52

2 Vision and collective emotions in Thucydides: eros, pothos, and anger — 57

2.1 Introductory notes — 57

2.2 Pericles' lovers of the city — 61

2.3 Lovers of sights: eros, pothos, and vision — 65

2.4 Archidamus, vision, and anger — 72

2.5 Conclusions — 78

3 Enargeia, emotions, and violence in forensic storytelling — 80

3.1 Forensic narratives: some preliminary observations — 80

3.2 Forensic narratives and Athenian courts — 84

3.3 Enargeia, verisimilitude, and emotions — 89

3.4 Enargeia, emotions, and stories about violence — 94

3.5 Conclusion — 122

4 The ideological uses of 'legitimate envy' in classical Athens — 123

4.1 Introduction — 123

4.2 Equalities, inequalities, and the envy of the hoi polloi — 129

4.3 The democratization of envy: 'indignation' and democratic ideology — 135

4.4 Meidias' lifestyle: spectacles of luxuriousness and legitimate envy — 148

5 Self-praise and envy in rhetoric and the Athenian courts — 159

5.1 Introduction — 159

5.2 Self-praise and envy — 160

5.3 Self-praise and envy avoidance strategies — 166

5.4 Self-praise and cooperation in classical Athens — 172

5.5 Conclusion — 187

Afterword — 189

Bibliography — 193

Index Rerum et Nominum — 211

Index Auctorum Antiquorum et Locorum — 215