

Contents

Acknowledgements	7
Introduction: The path through Nietzsche to transhumanism	9
Chapter One: What is transhumanism?	27
1. Transhumanism as humanity's cosmic lift-off	27
2. Which way up for the human condition?	31
3. Who's afraid of the human? Ecomodernism as energetic theology	36
4. Expanding the scope of the human in search of the divine	41
5. Back from Prometheus to Faust and Simon Magus: The theological roots of transgression	44
6. The indefinite pursuit of reason for its own sake: The philosophical roots of transgression	53
Chapter Two: The contours of transhumanist politics	65
1. Transhumanism as the fine art of occupying the extremes	65
2. Existential risk as the higher moral evasion	72
3. A peaceful but costly transhuman future? In search of the added value of being human	80
4. Morphological freedom and the quest for a responsible and representative transhumanism	90
5. Lessons for transhumanism from the difficult history of 'human rights'	98

6.	Ontological narcissism as a barrier to extending the 'Republic of Humanity'	107
7.	From transgender to transhumanism: The path away from Haraway's 'Cyborg Manifesto'	112
8.	The rocky road from transgender to transhuman	118
9.	Does extending rights to animals diminish the concept of right? .	124
10.	Conclusion: The centrality of uplift to the extended 'Republic of Humanity'	130
	Appendix: Transhumanist Bill of Rights	134
	Chapter Three: Death as a transhumanist lifestyle choice	137
1.	Suicide and the digital afterlife: An introduction to the transhumanist way of death	137
2.	Towards a transhumanist affirmation of death: Proposals for a positive necropolitics	150
3.	Making death worth its cost: Prolegomena to any future necronomics	163
4.	Generational change as a vehicle for radical conceptual change: The case for periodic rejuvenation	175
5.	Death as a virtue of living systems: From mass extinctions to creative destruction	187
	Two conclusions: One light and one heavy	197
	References	203
	Index	215