Series Preface

Palgrave Studies in European Political Sociology addresses contemporary themes in the field of Political Sociology. Over recent years, attention has turned increasingly to processes of Europeanization and globalization and the social and political spaces that are opened by them. These processes comprise both institutional-constitutional change and new dynamics of social transnationalism. Europeanization and globalization are also about changing power relations as they affect people's lives, social networks and forms of mobility.

The Palgrave Studies in European Political Sociology series addresses linkages between regulation, institution building and the full range of societal repercussions at local, regional, national, European and global level, and will sharpen understanding of changing patterns of attitudes and behaviours of individuals and groups, the political use of new rights and opportunities by citizens, new conflict lines and coalitions, societal interactions and networking, and shifting loyalties and solidarity within and across the European space. We welcome proposals from across the spectrum of Political Sociology, including on dimensions of citizenship; political attitudes and values; political communication and public spheres; states, communities, governance structure and political institutions; forms of political participation; populism and the radical right; and democracy and democratization.

Preface

How can groups of people be against capitalism? Isn't that like being against ageing or gravity? Isn't capitalism the best economic system there can be? For as long as there has been capitalism there has always been anti-capitalism. Maybe Hegel's dialectical materialism is correct? Or maybe Marx's historical materialism is? Or maybe political contention is more complicated than this? It is certainly the case that the world has seen numerous mass mobilizations against supranational political institutions and multinational corporations that are driving neoliberal globalization. The most recent has been the Occupy movement, which is in large measure a reaction against the banking system and the inability of western democratic systems to deal with the financial crisis caused by casino capitalism.

There have been many publications on these waves of protests against neoliberalism during the 21st century. There has been much less on the role that British anti-capitalist groups have played, and next to nothing on the internal conflict between anti-capitalist groups during this wave. More than this, the major social movement theories are not really equipped to deal with conflict between movements; they tend to focus on movements versus elites. This book provides a new theoretical lens with which to view ideological competition and conflict between movements that have the same political objectives.

This book charts some of the major events in which British anti-capitalist groups have taken part. This includes European Social Forums, anti-G8 mobilizations, and the Occupy movement in the UK. At the same time, it provides a sustained theoretical analysis of the complex and often conflictual relationships that British anti-capitalist groups have with each other. The main focus of the book is how British anti-capitalist groups subscribing to the ideologies of anarchism and socialism negotiate their politics with each other and with the wider social and political forces arguing against neoliberalism. In order to grasp the complexity of how groups subscribing to these ideologies interact, I have drawn on Bourdieu's theoretical technologies, including habitus, capital, field and doxa. These concepts are under-utilized in social movement analysis. Yet they provide the necessary power with which to understand the political biography of activists, their ideological intentions, the nature of the political landscape where intra-movement contention takes place, and how movements such as Occupy emerge out of crises. To this end, the book offers a fresh theoretical perspective.

Acknowledgements

I would like to thank Malcolm Todd for granting me study leave, and Matt Badcock, Natalia Gerodetti, John Hamill, Darren Nixon, Anna Pechurina and Chris Till for covering my teaching and administrative duties when I joined Leeds Beckett University in March 2014.

I am very grateful to my very dear friends David Evans (University of Manchester) and John Roberts (Brunel University), who read draft chapters of the manuscript for me. Their continued friendship and support, not to mention their good sense of humour, has really helped me raise my academic game.

A special thanks to Andy Price, who provided me with in-depth knowledge of the Indignados' protests and their relationship to the Occupy movement, and who offered some very insightful comments on chapter 2 of the book.

There have been many other friends who have been helpful along the way – Paul Bagguley, Cinnamon Bennett, Nick Crossley, Jon Dean, Gemma Edwards, Bob Jeffery, Michael Higgins, Mark Langan, Alex Nunn, Roy Todd and Dave Waddington. I'm very grateful to all of you for your friendship and collegiality!

The unsung heroes in all of this are the activists themselves. They give their time to causes in order to make the world a better place. Thanks to all of you who gave your time to be interviewed and invited me along to your meetings and other events, without which I could not have carried out the research.

I would like to thank all the coaches and members of CrossFit Leeds for providing an enjoyable gym experience and a physical escape from the largely sedentary activities associated with academia. This excellent strength and conditioning facility keeps me physically fit and strong, and ready to tackle any academic challenge. After all, nothing is as tough as CrossFit WOD!

The biggest thanks goes to my wonderful wife, Max, who painstakingly checked the references for the book and helped edit chapters 4, 6, 7 and 8. More than this, she is a rock who constantly supports everything I take on. None of this would be possible without her.

I would like to thank Sage and Taylor & Francis for allowing me to use material from 'Political Distinction in the British Anti-capitalist Movement', Sociology 45(2): 318–334, doi 10.1177/0038038510394026 and 'The Struggle for Symbolic Dominance in the British "Anti-capitalist Movement Field"', Social Movement Studies 12(1): 63–80, doi 10.1080/14742837.2012.666396, respectively.
