

Table of Contents

1. Introduction	15
1.1 The basic problem	15
1.2 Central aspects of morality	16
1.3 Aristotle and Brody—pioneers of Ethics as a Method	18
1.4 Ethics as a Method in the context of practice-oriented ethics	22
1.5 Procedure	27
2. Rationality as the origin of morality	29
2.1 Preliminary remarks	29
2.2 The thought experiment of the three worlds	30
(A) A world without rationality	30
(B) A world with rationality	31
(C) A world with one rational person	31
2.3 Rationality as a source of morality	33
2.4 The pluralism objection	37
2.5 Recommendations for an ethical method	41
3. Objectivity in ethics and moral judgements	43
3.1 Ayn Rand's ethical objectivism	43
3.2 What are moral judgements?	48
3.3 Moral intuitionism	52

3.4 On the phenomenology of moral cases—an attempt at categorisation	57
3.5 Moral judgements between universalism and particularism	60
3.6 Recommendations for an ethical method	62
4. Prudence as an ethical guideline	67
4.1 The concept of practical wisdom in Aristotle (EN VI)	67
4.1.1 Sections EN VI, 1–2	69
4.1.2 Sections EN VI, 3–7	70
4.1.3 Sections EN VI, 8–9	73
4.1.4 Sections EN VI, 10–12	82
4.1.5 Section EN VI, 13	86
4.1.6 Appreciation	89
4.2 Equity in Aristotle (EN V, 14)	94
(A) The relationship between equity and natural law I.	97
(B) The relationship between equity and natural law II.	100
4.3 Gadamer's hermeneutic method and the Aristotelian concept of prudence	107
(A) The hermeneutical problem of application	108
(B) The hermeneutical topicality of Aristotle	110
4.4 Recommendations for an ethical method	123
5. The Moral Expert	127
5.1 On the complexity of morality	127
5.2 The practically wise person	129
5.2.1 Remarks on Aristotle	129
5.2.2 Character and virtue	130

5.2.3 Remarks on the contemporary discussion I. . . .	133
5.2.4 Remarks on the contemporary discussion II. . . .	136
5.3 Ethical method vs. ethical theories	138
5.3.1 Between universalism and particularism	138
5.3.2 Ethics as a Method—morally relevant aspects . . .	139
5.4 Objections	142
5.4.1 Does moral expertise exist?	142
5.4.2 Are there any moral experts?	144
5.4.3 Is the ethical method arbitrary?	145
5.4.4 Do moral experts undermine the autonomy of others?	146
6. Concluding remarks	149
7. Bibliography	151