

Contents

Foreword to the English edition	1
Introduction	5
I. Change, becoming, motion	10
Things change	10
Kinds of change	12
What is motion?	15
II. The essence of motion	17
A definition of motion	17
Are there potential things?	19
III. Act and potency	24
Things are limited	24
Things are complex	25
What is a principle?	26
The chestnut and the chestnut tree	26
Michelangelo's David	27
Misunderstandings about act and potency	28
Act, potency, and motion	29
Acts	30
Potencies	31
Principles concerning act and potency	35
IV. Form and matter: hylomorphism	40
What remains?	40
Hylomorphism	41
Matter	46
Form	47
Realism	48
Nominalism	50

V. Substance and accident	53
The blossoming and the flower	53
Being in oneself and being in another	54
Arguments against substance	57
That which is added	63
VI. Essence and existence	68
What something is	68
Unity, multiplicity, and essence	71
Immanence of essences	72
Perceptibility of essences	73
Definition of essence	74
Essence, existence, and the real difference	77
Critique of essentialism	79
VII. Causality	82
Motion and causality	82
What is causality?	82
Emergence of something new or sequence of events?	83
Causality, an analytic principle	86
Types of causes	87
Material and formal cause	90
Efficient cause	93
Principles of efficient cause	96
Final cause	98
Objections against the Aristotelian-Scholastic causal theory	103
VIII. Conclusion	114
Bibliography	120
Index	126