

CONTENTS

Notation and typographical conventions 11

Acknowledgments 13

Introduction 15

Chapter One: Delimiting the scope and coping with metalanguage 17

1. Meaning, semiotics, and signs: preliminary description 17

2. Semantics: its scope and its metalanguage 18

3. The terminological principle and the cognitive approach to object language 22

3.1. The terminological principle defined 22

3.2. Alternative construals of domains of experience 23

3.2.1. Profile and base 23

3.2.2. Level of specificity 26

3.2.3. Scale and scope of predication 26

3.2.4. Relative salience of substructures
(trajector and landmark) 28

3.2.5. Background assumptions and expectations 31

3.2.6. Perspective (orientation, vantage point, directionality, subjectivity) 32

3.3. Conceptualizing the object language 34

4. Implementing the terminological principle – theoretical preliminaries 35

4.1. Three specific postulates 35

4.2. Causes of the terminological chaos 36

4.3. Fundamental commitments and terms 36

4.4. The ontological triad 38

4.5. Notation 38

4.6. Two further philosophical commitments 40

4.7. The communication sequence 40

4.8. Interfaces between neural and mental (conceptual) structures 43

4.9. Some ontological controversies 45

4.10. Evidence from neurology? 48

4.11. The Great Chain of Being 58

4.12. Cognitive approach to empirical sciences 61

4.13. Why is linguistics overlooked?	63
4.14. A few more remarks about language	65
4.15. Primary linguistic data	67
5. Implementing the terminological principle – applications	68
5.1. Regimentation and its limitations	68
5.2. Semantic metalanguages as different representations	69
5.3. Definitions of basic metaterms	70
5.3.1. Designation	70
5.3.2. Extension	71
5.3.3. Intension (sense)	72
5.3.4. Signification	72
5.3.5. Reference	75
5.3.6. Denotation	75
5.3.7. Connotation	78
6. Various approaches to linguistic meaning	78
6.1. Seven types of “theories”	78
6.2. Referential	79
6.3. Denotational	82
6.4. Ideational	82
6.5. Behaviourist	87
6.6. Meaning-in-use	90
6.7. Verificational and truth-conditional	90
Chapter Two: Aspects of linguistic meaning	97
7. Semantic relations between sentences and words	97
7.1. Semantic relations between sentences	97
7.2. Semantic relations between words (lexemes)	100
7.2.1. Synonymy	102
7.2.2. Antonymy	104
7.2.3. Hyponymy and hyperonymy	107
7.2.4. Homonymy and polysemy	108
7.2.5. Fluidity of senses	109
7.2.6. Apparent polysemy	109
7.2.7. Quasi-polysemy	110
7.2.8. True polysemy	110
7.2.9. Polysemy vs. homonymy as a lexicographic problem	114

8. Sentences and utterances	120
8.1. Linguistic meaning	120
8.2. Systemic meaning vs. utterance meaning	123
8.3. Text and discourse	124
8.4. Classification of texts and discourses	127
8.5. Degrees of openness of texts and discourses	131
8.6. Contextual determinants of meaning	133
8.6.1. Assigning specific senses	133
8.6.2. Attributing specific reference	134
8.6.3. Supplying information omitted due to ellipsis	138
8.6.4. Making clear the pragmatic value	139
8.7. Systemic sentence meaning and utterance meaning – prototypical correspondences	141
8.8. Declarative sentences and propositions	147
8.9. Incongruities between sentence meaning and utterance meaning	150
8.9.1. Irony and sarcasm	150
8.9.2. Rhetorical questions (erotesis)	152
8.9.3. Apophasis	152
8.9.4. Understatement	152
8.9.5. Litotes	152
8.9.6. Hyperbole	153
8.9.7. Conversational implicatures	153
9. Connotative meaning	156
9.1. Properties of connotative meaning	156
9.2. Types of connotative meaning	160
9.2.1. Reflected	160
9.2.2. Collocative	161
9.2.3. Stylistic	162
9.2.4. Affective	165
Chapter Three: Axiological elements of meaning	171
10. Axiological semantics	171
10.1. Preliminaries	171
10.2. The scope of axiology	176
10.2.1. Axiology	176
10.2.2. Values, bearers of values, valuation	177
10.2.3. Physical domain and mental domain	177
10.2.4. Things and other entities	178

10.2.5. Entities as bearers of values: general, particular and singular	178
10.2.6. Valuation of other entities	181
11. The Domain of Values	183
11.1. Basic theses about meaning and valuation – profiling	183
11.1.1. The Great Chain of Being and the vertical dimension	185
11.1.2. The horizontal dimension	187
11.1.3. The Domain of Values and the two coordinates	188
11.2. Basic theses about meaning and valuation continued – conventional imagery	189
11.2.1. Level of specificity	189
11.2.2. Background assumptions and expectations	190
11.2.3. Secondary activation.....	191
11.2.4. Scale and scope of predication.....	191
11.2.5. Relative salience of substructures.....	191
11.2.6. Perspective	193
12. Pre-axiological schemas	197
12.1. Preconceptual image schemas	197
12.2. Preschemas	198
12.3. Structural properties of preschemas and the ensuing classification	201
12.4. The interaction of the PLUS-MINUS schema with simple schemas	202
12.5. The interaction of the PLUS-MINUS schema with complex schemas	204
12.6. CONTAINER, CONSTRAINTER, and Fundamental Axiological Matrix (FAMA)	206
12.7. FAMA and axiological charges	208
12.8. FAMA and other schemas	210
12.9. Final remarks	212
13. Metaphorical construal of discourse	212
13.1. Metaphors of discourse	212
13.2. Discourse and the CONDUIT metaphor	213
13.2.1. What is the CONDUIT metaphor?	213
13.2.2. Some alleged inadequacies of the CONDUIT metaphor	213

13.2.3. Defending the CONDUIT metaphor	215
13.2.4. The CONDUIT metaphor and successful communication	218
13.3. The DISCOURSE IS MOVEMENT metaphor	218
13.4. Co-operative discourse and Oppositional discourse	221
13.5. Axiological clashes and the two types of discourse	223
13.6. Metaphors made real	224
14. Semanto-axiological aspects of texts and discourse	225
14.1. Axiological clashes (AC's)	225
14.2. Axiological clashes in discourse	227
14.3. Discourse and preconceptual image schemas	228
14.4. Internal and external clashes	231
14.5. Meta-axiological interludes (MAIN's)	233
14.6. Axiological structure of discourse	235
14.7. Axiological coherence of discourse	240
14.8. Some linguistic exponents of AC's and MAIN's	241
14.9. Problems to investigate	242
References	243