

CONTENTS

Foreword by David Benatar	xiii
Foreword by Thomas Ligotti	xv
Translator's Preface	xvii
Author's Preface	xxi
 Chapter 1. Introduction	 1
§ 1. Goal and method	1
§ 2. Concerns	6
 Chapter 2. Biological Conditions	 9
§ 3. Individual and the outside world	9
§ 4. Fundamental features of the individual's life	11
§ 5. Uexküll's schema	20
§ 6. Conflict	23
§ 7. Morality. Terminology	25
§ 8. Abilities. Surplus and deficiency	28
 Chapter 3. On Primitiveness and Differentiation	 37
§ 9. Protoplasm	37
§ 10. Primitiveness in humans	40

Chapter 4. Human Interest Fronts	45
§ 11. Biological interest front	45
§ 12. Social interest front	46
§ 13. Autotelic interest front	52
§ 14. Metaphysical interest front	56
§ 15. Polyfrontal engagements	63
Chapter 5. On Over-equipment and Unfixedness in Humans	71
§ 16. Character	71
§ 17. Over-equipment. General remarks	74
§ 18. Physical power	77
§ 19. Perception	77
§ 20. Intellect	84
§ 21. Memory	87
§ 22. Imagination	88
§ 23. Emotion	90
§ 24. Other abilities	91
§ 25. Combinations	91
§ 26. More on character and personality	99
§ 27. Example	101
§ 28. The “metaphysical-melancholic clarity of vision”	103
§ 29. Comment	108
§ 30. Variations in metaphysical readiness	112
§ 31. Metaphysical-moral anxiety	115
§ 32. A test subject goes into the fire	117
§ 33. Psychopathological point of view	121
§ 34. Pathological form – cultural relevance	124
§ 35. The concept of culture	125
§ 36. The abnormal	127
§ 37. Psychiatry and culture	129
§ 38. The cultural-pathological paradox	132
§ 39. Comment	136
§ 40. Birnbaum’s conclusion	138
§ 41. Other authors	140
§ 42. Comment. Own conclusions	143
§ 43. Parallels from the animal kingdom	145

Chapter 6. Real Solution and Surrogate	149
§ 44. Introduction	149
§ 45. Real and pseudo-solutions. Concepts	150
§ 46. Surrogate posture	151
§ 47. Real solution associated with deficit in general (1 a)	154
§ 48. Deficiency. Surrogate solution (1 b)	155
§ 49. Surplus state. Real Solution (2 a)	157
§ 50. Under-fixedness (3)	158
§ 51. Over-fixedness and error-fixedness (4)	167
§ 52. First example	168
§ 53. Second example	169
§ 54. Third example	175
§ 55. Fourth example	181
§ 56. The experience image	185
§ 57. The desire image	186
§ 58. The working image	198
§ 59. Metaphysical morality	203
§ 60. Fifth example	220
Chapter 7. On Catastrophes	229
§ 61. Suffering, misfortune, catastrophe	229
§ 62. Catastrophes. The individual links	231
§ 63. Object of attack	232
§ 64. The attacking power	234
§ 65. Own complicity	237
§ 66. The first outline of the concept of guilt	238
§ 67. The importance of criminal law for the present context	244
§ 68. Outline of the general part of criminal law	245
§ 69. Existential guilt, physiological guilt, functional guilt, psychological and ethical guilt	272
§ 70. Criminal guilt	289
§ 71. Metaphysical guilt	291
§ 72. The occasion, the “triggering cause”	292
§ 73. The posture of the stricken person	297

Chapter 8. Qualified Catastrophes. Determination of the Objectively Tragic	299
§ 74. Qualifications. Double-acting impetus. Peripeteia	299
§ 75. The tragic qualification	307
§ 76. Comment	310
§ 77. Victim and observer	313
§ 78. Culturally relevant greatness	315
§ 79. Greatness and catastrophe	320
§ 80. A. The counterpower is linked to the origin, unfolding, or result of greatness	323
§ 81. B. Catastrophe by autotelic and heterotelic greatness	324
§ 82. C. Greatness in fixedness and capacity	326
§ 83. D. Greatness asserts itself in the biological, social, or metaphysical field of interest. It unfolds in a hostile (satanic), indifferent, or sympathetic environment	331
§ 84. E. Greatness is linked to a real or pseudo-engagement	337
§ 85. F. The catastrophe strikes (directly or indirectly) the interest associated with greatness, or it strikes a different interest	338
§ 86. G. Greatness is one- or multi-sided; it leads to catastrophe through conflict or without conflict	341
§ 87. H. The counterpower is internal or external or both	343
§ 88. I. The stricken contributes to the course with existential guilt, physiological guilt, functional guilt, psychological, ethical, criminal, or metaphysical guilt. The term "tragic guilt"	346
§ 89. K. Randomness and necessity in the tragic course	351
§ 90. Is there an absolutely necessary tragedy?	360
§ 91. With the question of the necessity of the tragic, another naturally arises: Can the tragic be overcome?	366
§ 92. The heroic	371
§ 93. Tragedy and lifeview	377
Chapter 9. On the Autotelic Experience of the Tragic	381
§ 94. Autotelic and heterotelic viewpoints	381
§ 95. New field of experience	386
§ 96. The tragic course of poetry	388
§ 97. The theater	400
§ 98. The term "aesthetic"	401

§ 99. The relativity of the viewer	405
§ 100. Introspective method	407
§ 101. The individual factors of the poetic-tragic experience	410
§ 102. The overall poetic-tragic course	423
§ 103. Comment	427
Chapter 10. Tragic Poetic Works	431
§ 104. Introduction	431
§ 105. Aeschylus: Prometheus Bound	436
§ 106. Job	441
§ 107. Shakespeare's Hamlet	452
Chapter 11. Scattered Features from the Literature on the Tragic	467
§ 108. Aristotle (384–322 B.C.)	467
§ 109. Sketch of the history of tragic theory in recent times	481
§ 110. Theodor Lipps	513
§ 111. Johannes Volkelt	538
§ 112. Josef Körner	552
Summary	565
Index	569