

Table of Content

Preface by the author and acknowledgements	13
List of abbreviations	17
Part one: The media order	19
1 Introduction	19
1.1 The crisis of democracy	21
1.2 The role of public sphere in democracies	25
1.2.1 How public is the public discourse?	28
1.2.2 How rational is the "rational discourse"? Rational versus ritual models of communication	31
2 Media freedom and pluralism in the platform age	37
2.1 Defining media freedom	37
2.1.1 Elements of media freedom	37
2.1.2 Who are the right holders of media freedom?	40
2.1.3 The content of media freedom	43
2.1.4 Platforms in the context of media freedom	46
2.2 The effects of algorithmic content ranking	50
2.3 The value added by journalists and platforms' attempt for substituting them	54
2.4 Dimensions of Media Pluralism	56
2.4.1 Institutional independence	59
2.4.2 Resilience of market and society	61
2.4.3 Structural diversity	62
3 The state's obligation in building a democratic media order	65
3.1 Microscopical rights and Big Data	65
3.2 The right to receive information	69

Table of Content

3.3	User autonomy and nudges	72
3.4	The state's obligation to protect pluralism	75
3.5	Why the EU?	80
Part two:	European initiatives to develop a new democratic media order	85
4	Initiatives in Media Pluralism	85
4.1	The development of European policy in regard of media pluralism	85
4.1.1	The tumultuous story of the media landscape in the new millennium	88
4.1.2	Competence issues and new impetus to the development	91
4.1.3	Understanding the obstacles of the process	94
4.2	European efforts to regulate the broadcast media	96
4.2.1	Opening the box of Pandora: the transformation of broadcasting's interpretation in community law	96
4.2.2	TWF Directive: the Trojan Horse	98
4.2.3	A new era for public service broadcasting	99
4.2.4	The AVMSD today	102
5	The Media Freedom Act	105
5.1	Background	105
5.3	The scope of EMFA	115
5.4	Rights and duties	117
5.4.1	Rights of the audience	117
5.4.2	The rights of media service providers	119
5.5	Safeguards for public service media	122
5.6	Transparency of media service providers	124
5.6.1	How useful is transparency?	125
5.6.2	The conundrum of the ownership database	127
5.7	The Board	131
5.7.1	NRA Independence	132
5.7.2	The Board and the Commission	137

5.8	EMFA's approach to the "Russia Today" problem	139
5.8.1	The background of the ban	140
5.8.2	Treatment of the problem by EMFA	144
5.9	Media concentration	145
5.9.1	New aspects to assess in media concentration	145
5.9.2	The procedural rules on assessment of media concentration	148
5.10	State advertising	149
5.11	Media content and online platforms	153
5.12	Monitoring and evaluation	159
5.12.1	From mutual distrust to mutual trust	160
5.12.2	Possibilities: proposals for amendment	161
5.13	Epilogue	164
	Part three: A regulatory framework for online platforms	165
6	The Digital Services Act and the Codes of Practices	165
6.1	Prologue to DSA: the legacy of the E-Commerce Directive	165
6.2	Aims, scope and structure of DSA: more than just services	170
6.2.1	Scope	172
6.2.1.1	Quo Vadis, Platform?	172
6.2.1.2	Who else are not platforms?	174
6.2.2	Territorial scope	175
6.2.3	The structure of DSA	177
6.3	Regulating illegal content: transparency and fair procedure. A detailed scrutiny.	179
6.3.1	Liability and due diligence	179
6.3.2	Immunity, as a constraint on liberty	181
6.3.3	The liability framework	183
6.3.4	Due diligence	186
6.3.4.1	Platforms' terms of services	189
6.3.4.2	Transparency reporting obligations	190
6.3.4.3	Transparency reporting for online platforms	192
6.3.4.4	Further obligations for very large online platforms	192

6.3.4.5 Scrutiny of the shared data	194
6.3.5 Rights of the users in the notice-and-takedown procedure	195
6.4 Specific obligations for online platforms	197
6.4.1 Alternative dispute resolution	198
6.4.2 Trusted flaggers	201
6.4.3 Measures related to content governance	203
6.5 Very large online platforms' due diligence obligations	205
6.5.1 The system of risk-management and co-regulation	206
6.5.2 The risk assessment in DSA	208
6.6 Self- and co-regulation as part of the legal regime	211
6.6.1 The hidden traps of auditing	213
6.6.2 The incentives, execution and objectives of the codes under DSA	218
6.6.3 The soft power of the codes	219
6.6.4 The Strengthened Code of Practice on Disinformation	220
6.6.5 The Code's content: Reordering the information landscape	222
6.6.6 Interim summary on DSA and the Code of Practice on Disinformation	228
6.7 The Code of Conduct tackling illegal hate speech	229
6.8 Crisis protocols	231
6.9 Summary on the DSA and its regulatory structure	232
6.10 The relationship of AVMSD, ECD and DSA	234
7 Regulation of the Digital Market	237
7.1 The regulatory philosophy of the Digital Markets Act	237
7.2 Comparing social and business platforms	239
7.3 Quo Vadis, Platforms? #2	242
7.4 Obligations of gatekeepers	245
7.4.1 A less unfair use of data	245
7.4.2 Prohibition of paralysing contractual conditions	250
7.4.3 Advertising transparency	251

7.5	Prohibition of self-preferencing	252
7.5.1	No expropriation of personal data	252
7.5.2	Equal treatment	254
7.5.3	Non-discrimination and fairness in ranking?	256
7.6	The pros and cons of interoperability	258
7.7	Enforcement of DMA	261
7.8	The impact of DMA – summary	263
8	Political advertising	267
8.1	Emerging frontiers in political advertising	267
8.2	The pitfalls of personalized targeting	269
8.3	The protection of political speech	271
8.4	Why was self-regulation insufficient?	274
8.5	The Regulation on political advertising (RPA)	276
8.5.1	The concept of RPA	276
8.5.2	The scope of the RPA	278
8.5.2.1	The definition of a political actor	279
8.5.2.2	The second condition: the impact of the message	280
8.5.2.3	The payment element	281
8.5.2.4	Explanatory features	283
8.5.3	Non-discrimination and third countries	283
8.5.4	Responsibilities of the actors	284
8.5.5	Political advertising by VLOPs	285
8.5.6	Rules on targeting	287
8.5.7	Enforcement of RPA	289
8.6	The interplay between the DSA and the Strengthened Code of Practice against Disinformation	290
8.7	Interim conclusion on RPA	291
9	The wider technological environment: AI Act	293
9.1	A literally disruptive technology	294
9.1.1	The scope and subject matter of the AI Act	296
9.1.2	The regulatory model	299

9.1.3	Prohibited AI practices	300
9.1.3.1	Manipulation	300
9.1.3.2	Social scoring	302
9.1.3.3	Biometric identification	303
9.1	High-risk AI systems	305
9.1.1	The scope of high-risk AI systems	305
9.1.2	Updating the list of high-risk systems	307
9.1.3	Requirements for high-risk AI systems	311
9.1.4	Obligations of various actors within the value chain	314
9.1.5	Taking responsibility for algorithmic systems	315
9.2	General purpose AI models (GPAI)	316
9.2.1	Media uses of AI	317
9.2.1.1	Authorship and copyright: whose content?	319
9.2.1.2	Liability for AI-generated content	321
9.2.1.3	Liability for AI-generated content in the media	322
9.2.2	Deep fakes	325
9.2.3	Legal concerns related to training data of GPAI	327
9.3	The impact of AI and conclusion	328
10	Bird's Eye View: Concluding Thoughts	331
10.1.	The new transformation of the public discourse	331
10.2.	The stake of the game: a historical shift	332
10.3.	The role of media and the might of platforms	334
10.1.	Trust in media, trust in politics	336
10.2.	Constructing a value-centred European order	337
11	References	341