

Contents

Acknowledgements	7
I. Premises
Fiction and Truth in South Africa and Argentina	13
Fiction(s) and Philosophy	22
The Writer as Researcher	31
The Anthropological Turn	49
II. South Africa (2007)
Memories of a Modernity-to-be	67
The truth is mediated by the text; it's not 'out there'	88
Reclaiming the Public Space	97
The Communal "We"	104
Reinventing History	122
Indians and Africans were coming together	150
Living here is like living on adrenaline	156
The Trope-of-Reconciliation	167
The question of race has reared its head again	199
Challenging the Heart of Whiteness	203
The truth will suggest a more meaningful reconciliation	209
Amazing Disgrace	221
Unless you can live here as a powerless minority you may just as well leave	244

III.	Argentina (2008)
	Pillar of Salt	261
	The Fabric of Society	291
	Literature postulates reality	296
	Memories of a Failed Revolution	309
	The Left ought to make a gesture of repentance	329
	A Change of View	338
	We were not Martians	346
	Narrating history is a space of combat and interchange between genres	351
	Islands of Oblivion	356
	Fiction to me is a life unlivd	380
	The Phenomenology of Disappearance	391
	The Esma challenges our production of memory	403
	Postmemory in Motion	410
	Argentinean society is very self-complacent	436
	We almost should not talk about fiction	444
	Highway 70 Revisited	454
	Literary fiction works the void of experience	471
IV.	By way of conclusion
	Fiction and Social Change	485
	References	500