

Contents

Acknowledgements	viii
Introduction: A New Subgenre of the Essay	1
PART I
When Essays and Things Meet	19
1 The Essay's Democratic Potential	21
“ A Haven for the Private, Idiosyncratic Voice ”:
The Essay's Subjectivity and Particularity 25
“ Dispersed Meditations ”: The Essay's Anti-Systematic Approach 34
The Essay as a Democratic Genre 37
2 Things and How They Appear to Us	43
The Inexhaustibility of Thingness: Graham Harman's 'Flat Ontology' 52
Between 'Misuse Value' and 'Redemptive Reification': Bill Brown's 'Dialectical Objects' 55
Collective Thingness: Jean Baudrillard's 'Sign Value' and Theodor W. Adorno's 'False Needs' 58
3 The Thing-Essay and Its Three Modes	63
The Transformative Mode 65
The Associative Mode 68
The Meta-Reflective Mode 73

PART IIBetween Thing Culture and Commodity Culture: A History of British and Anglo-Irish Thing-Essays

79

4 From Semantics to Sentimentality: Thing-Essays in the Eighteenth Century	81
Things in Eighteenth-Century Culture 82
Things in Eighteenth-Century Literature 89
“A tree turned upside down”: The Transformative Mode and Satirical Anthropomorphisation in Jonathan Swift’s “Meditation upon a Broomstick” (1701) 96
“An ordinary coin”: The Transformative Mode and Social Stabilisation in Joseph Addison’s Tatler-Piece No. 249 (1710) 101
“A silent chronicle of past hours”: The Meta-Reflective Mode as Door Opener in Henry Mackenzie’s “The Mirror No. 61” (1779) 111
5 Thing-Essays during Romanticism	118
Things in Romantic Culture 118
Things in Romantic Literature 121
“Trifles of this sort”: The Associative Mode as a Way out of Commodity Culture’s ‘False Needs’ in Charles Lamb’s “Old China” (1823) 123
“A thousand shining fragments”: The Associative Mode as an Indicator of Moral Integrity in William Hazlitt’s “The Letter-Bell” (1831) 130
6 From Thing Culture to Commodity Culture: Victorian Thing-Essays	137
Things in Victorian Culture 137
Things in Victorian Literature 141
“Then was the old world”: The Associative Mode as a Sustainer of Nostalgia in William Makepeace Thackeray’s “De Juventute” (1860) 142
“ The Urim and Thummim of Respectability ”: Irony and the Meta-Reflective Mode in Robert Louis Stevenson’s “The Philosophy of Umbrellas” (1871) 150
7 “An Indian Summer”: The Democratisation of Thing-Essays in the Interwar Period	159
Things in the Edwardian and Interwar Years 159
Things in Edwardian and Interwar Literature 161

“Such Common Objects”: The Meta-Reflective Mode as a Call for Daydreaming in G. K. Chesterton’s “Lamp-Posts” (1920)	167
“A Lost Arcadia”: The Meta-Reflective Mode and Collective Nostalgia in J. B. Priestley’s “The Toy Farm” (1927)	173
“The commodious depths of the easy chair”: The Meta-Reflective and Associative Modes as Tools for Integration in Rose Macaulay’s “Arm-Chair” (1935)	179
8 “Things Have a Way of Insinuating Themselves into All Human Lives”: Thing-Essays from the Post-War-Period until Today	186
Things in the Post-War Period	186
Things in Post-War Literature	191
“ Its Psychic, Own, Imperative Moment ”: The Transformative Mode as a Tool for Political and Ontological Destabilisation in Elizabeth Bowen’s “The Teakettle” (1963)	192
“ The tricky equation between things and freedom ”: An Anatomy of Thing and Commodity Culture through the Meta-Reflective Mode in Bruce Chatwin’s “The Morality of Things” (1973)	199
“ The Healing Potential of the Doughnut ”: The Transformative Mode as a Return to Subjectivity in Geoff Dyer’s “Otherwise Known as the Human Condition (with Particular Reference to Doughnut Plant Doughnuts)” (2009)	204
“ We just don’t fit into the grand scheme of THINGS ” – The Meta-Reflective Mode and Resignation in Lucy Ellmann’s “Things are Against Us” (2021)	213
Coda: Things to Come	219
Bibliography	229
Appendix: List of British and Anglo-Irish Thing-Essays	242
Index	244