

Contents

Acknowledgments	VII
Color plates	XI
Introduction	1
I. Graves without a cemetery	5
II. The due of the dead: geras thanonton and the grave markers of the Geometric period (1000–700 BC). The “familiar death.”	17
III. The deceased appears as a person: grave sculptures of the Archaic period (circa 650–490 BC)	49
1. The grave portrait as geras thanontos	51
2. “You there, who move along the road ... stand still”. Grave poems and grave portraits	101
3. The modest alternative: grave markers without portraits	112
4. A counterworld: ancient Egyptian funerary portraits ...	119
IV. Discovering the self and the other: grave markers of the Classical period (circa 430–300 BC)	125
1. Discovering the self and the other. The “conscious death”	127
2. The Athenians and the Underworld	135
3. Athens and its warriors: the Demosion Sema	164
4. The family asserts itself: grave precincts and grave sculpture	198
5. The revalorization of the wedding and the transformation of nuptial imagery.	208

6. The new grave portraits of the Classical period	221
7. The types of Classical grave portrait	232
8. On the particular character of Classical grave reliefs	331
9. Grief in the family: the grave epigrams	335
10. Animals and mythical creatures in the grave precincts	344
11. The last heyday and the end of the Classical grave markers in Athens	357
12. Thanatos	369
Abbreviations	373
Bibliography of works cited	374
References to the illustrations	402
Notes	417
Indices	435