

Table of Contents

Introduction — 1

I Bergmann's Prague and Czech Lands

Hillel J. Kieval

Village Memories and National Renewal:

Prague to Jerusalem via Chraštice and Galicia — 9

Štěpán Balík, Marie Brunová, Jiří Holý, Hana Nichtburgerová, and Olga Zitová
“Our Attitude to the Yiddish Language”

Hugo Bergmann on the Yiddish Language, a Comparison with Kafka and Langer, and the Yiddish Research in the Czech Republic — 23

Anna-Dorothea Ludewig

“The Lifeline”: Max Brod and Hugo Bergmann — 41

Julius H. Schoeps

Theodor Lessing, Hugo Bergmann, and the “Prague Circle” — 53

Jan Fingerland

Bergmann's Prague Years 1883–1919: A Man beyond Categories of his Era — 61

Blanka Soukupová

The Jewish National Movement in the Czech Lands During the First Republic and Hugo Bergmann: Czech Jews amid Jewish, Czech and Czechoslovak Identities — 69

Zbyněk Tarant

The Last Chapter? Leo Herrmann and the Czech Transfer (1938–1939) — 79

II Bergmann in Palestine and Israel

Boaz Huss

“There are so Many Ways of Spiritual Development”: Shmuel Hugo Bergmann’s Interests in Western Esoteric and Alternative Spiritual Currents — 97

Olaf Glöckner and Marcela Menachem Zoufalá

“Is the Spirit of the Fathers still Alive?”

Hugo Bergmann Between the Zionist Dream, Search for Justice, and Inner Doubts — 119

Zvi Leshem

To Be a Librarian in 1920 – What Did that Mean?

Samuel Hugo Bergmann the Librarian — 129

III Philosophy and Theology

Daniel M. Herskowitz

Bergmann as a Conduit of European Philosophy: The Case of Martin Heidegger — 153

Guy Paz

Embracing an Anthroposophical Vision of Judaism:

Schmuel Hugo Bergmann Reads Ernst Müller — 171

Nicham Ross

A Leap of Faith

Samuel Hugo Bergmann as a Disciple of Buber and Rosenzweig — 181

Arie M. Dubnov and Shimon Lev

Hugo Bergmann’s India

From Nehru to Aurobindo and “The Mother” — 197

Bibliography — 223

About the Authors — 243

Index of Persons — 249