

Contents

List of figures — VII

1 Introduction — 1

Part I The meaning of time: a framework for temporal study

2 The meaning of time — 13

- 2.1 What is time? — 17
- 2.2 Time and change — 20
- 2.3 George Herbert Mead — 24
- 2.4 Emergence or temporal change — 26
- 2.5 So, what is an event? — 29
- 2.6 The meaning of time is slightly more than meaningful difference — 33

3 The present — 36

- 3.1 When is now? — 38
- 3.2 Presentism — 42
- 3.3 Past, present, future — 46
- 3.4 Present events — 50
- 3.5 Time is struggle — 53

4 Perspective — 56

- 4.1 Revisiting difference — 57
- 4.2 The objectivity of perspective — 60
- 4.3 Time and communication — 65
- 4.4 Systems in time — 67
- 4.5 Asynchronicity as systemic stress — 75

Part II Possibilities for temporal study

5 Acceleration — 81

- 5.1 Acceleration — 83
- 5.2 First-order acceleration — 87
- 5.3 Second-order acceleration — 90
- 5.4 Is there evidence of logical acceleration? — 92

- 5.5 Accelerating to asynchronicity — 99
- 5.6 Deliberatively in time — 100
- 5.7 Speed and deliberation — 104

6 Polarisation — 107

- 6.1 Our divided times — 109
- 6.2 A note on normativity — 112
- 6.3 Second-order presents and logical study — 113
- 6.4 The polarisation of the political present — 116
- 6.5 The tendency to “de-temporalise” polarisation — 118
- 6.6 Critical temporal reading — 122
- 6.7 The Lincoln Memorial confrontation — 124
- 6.8 Polarised demic logic — 129
- 6.9 Mediated presence — 130

7 The datafied event — 132

- 7.1 Media events — 135
- 7.2 Media eventness and eventness-less — 141

8 Conclusion — 158

- 8.1 The informational crisis — 159
- 8.2 Asynchronicity is real — 160
- 8.3 Time has meaning — 161
- 8.4 The evidence of asynchronicity — 163
- 8.5 When next? — 167

Bibliography — 173

Index — 183