

Contents

Acknowledgments — VII

List of figures — XI

Introduction: Why the Search for Cognition in Classical Studies? — 1

Cognitive linguistics — 11

Memory and cognition — 16

Theory of mind — 19

Cognitive poetics — 21

Artificial intelligence and Classics — 23

Towards a constructive dialogue? — 28

Chapter 1 Objects acting: Ancient sources and ‘material turn(s)’ — 32

1.1 General premises — 33

1.2 Cognitive archaeology and ancient material — 37

1.3 Material engagement and “how things shape the mind” — 39

1.4 “Material turn” and the interpretation of texts — 44

1.5 Embodied perception — 52

Chapter 2 Spatial perception and ancient sources — 58

2.1 Space and social cognition — 60

2.2 Theoretical preconditions — 63

2.3 Ancient theatre as place and space: a case study — 65

2.4 Literary sources and the perception of space and place — 70

Chapter 3 Imaginations, visions, and perception — 77

3.1 Cognitive approaches to viewing in ancient dramaturgy and theatre — 77

3.2 Cognitive vision in ancient sources — 86

3.3 Conceptual theory of metaphor and ancient texts — 97

Chapter 4 Experience and the senses — 106

4.1 Experientiality and evidentiality in language — 106

4.2 Experience and ‘sensory turn’ in the Classics — 110

4.3 ‘Religious experience’ and cognitive science — 114

4.4 Choruses as vehicles of social, political, and religious life — 121

X — Contents

Chapter 5 Emotions and ancient sources: conversations with David Konstan, Angelos Chaniotis, and Douglas Cairns — 125

- 5.1 David Konstan — 131
- 5.2 Angelos Chaniotis — 138
- 5.3 Douglas Cairns — 145

Conclusion: Off to new shores? — 157

Bibliography — 163

General Index — 206

Index of Greek and Latin passages — 210