

Content

Foreword — 1

1 By way of introduction: Precious little — 8

2 Loosening the ground:

Thinking about society, thinking society — 21

- 2.1 Society, needs and wants, language — 22
- 2.2 What is λόγος? — 23
- 2.3 Opinion: Holding things and each other to be (whatness and whoness) — 25
- 2.4 Showing oneself off as someone — 26
- 2.5 The openness of three-dimensional time as the enabling dimension within which society is situated — 29
- 2.6 Living well and being someone – The need to interrogate the tradition — 32

3 Further outline of the phenomenon of whoness — 35

- 3.1 Bearing a name and standing in estimation in the community through valuing interplay — 36
- 3.2 Human social being as self-presentation and showing-off in the 3D-temporal clearing in an interplay of estimable reputability (politeness, pride, vulnerability, arrogance, conceit) — 40
- 3.3 Further exemplary phenomena of standing and not standing as someone (flattery, manliness) – The existential possibility of coming to one's very own, genuine stand as self — 44
 - 3.3.1 Digression: Dialectic of self and other – Wrestling with Plato, Hegel, Heidegger — 49
 - 3.3.1.1 Preliminary considerations when approaching Plato's and Hegel's dialectical thinking — 49
 - 3.3.1.2 Approaching an existential dialectic of self and other through an interpretation of a passage from Plato's Parmenides — 56
 - 3.3.1.3 The Hegelian dialectic of the concept, primal splitting and closing together — 66
 - 3.3.1.4 Heideggerian selfhood as a "shining-back" from being-in-the-world — 72
 - 3.3.1.5 Interpreting the dialectic of primal splitting and closing together with regard to selfhood — 80

VIII — Content

- 4 The satisfaction of wants and the striving to have more — 91
 - 4.1 Economics and chrematistics — 92
 - 4.2 Weber's conception of economic activity — 99
 - 4.3 The Cartesian cast of economics — 104
 - 4.4 Schumpeter's equilibrium theory — 107
 - 4.5 Aristotle on money and exchange – Money as a medium practically unifying social usages — 111
 - 4.6 Endless money-making? — 117

- 5 Ontology of exchange — 122
 - 5.1 Commodity exchange and the necessity of rethinking Aristotelean δύναμις — 123
 - 5.2 Productive know-how, acquisitive know-how? — 126
 - 5.3 Commodity exchange not guided by the insight of know-how — 129
 - 5.4 Two complementary, reciprocal pairs of δυνάμεις: Reified value and desire — 134
 - 5.5 Recapitulation and the coming together of goods in commerce — 142
 - 5.5.1 A side-glance at Hegel's treatment of actuality, possibility, contingency, necessity and freedom — 145
 - 5.6 Exchange as core phenomenon of social intercourse: Interchange and interplay — 153
 - 5.6.1 Reciprocally showing off who one is in the interplay of mutual estimation — 158
 - 5.6.2 The interplay of powers of self-presentation – engendering trust — 162
 - 5.6.3 Mutual estimation: Personhood, esteem and respect, the power play over who-standing and the possible intimacy between you-and-me — 166

- 6 Justice — 170
 - 6.1 Justice as a fundamental social phenomenon of having one's fair share (Aristotle) – Strauss' misconception of ontological origins – The goods of living: valuable things and esteem – Ongoing competitive interplay estimating each other's abilities — 170
 - 6.2 Distributive and commutative justice — 178
 - 6.3 Marxist critiques of capitalist social relations as unjust — 183

- 6.3.1 The untenability of the labour theory of value as a theory of just exchange masking exploitation — 183
- 6.3.2 Groundlessness of sociating interplay — 192
- 6.3.3 The untenability of the theory of surplus value as a theory of capitalist exploitation — 196
- 6.3.4 Injustice of capitalist wage-labour per se? — 198
- 6.4 The just distribution of the goods of living — 205
- 6.5 Redistributive social justice, the welfare state and the alleviation of poverty — 209
- 6.6 Esteem, honour and fame in social life with a focus on Aristotle and Schopenhauer — 215
- 6.7 A just distribution of honour and fame in society? – The (non-)fame of creative recasters of an historical world — 226
- 6.8 The gainful game among competitive players — 230
- 6.9 Recent debates on justice in Anglophone moral philosophy and the disappearance of commutative justice — 236
- 6.9.1 Walzer's plurality of distribution systems — 239
- 6.9.2 Conceptions of distributive justice and the welfare state — 241
- 6.10 Critical appraisal of Nozickian libertarianism — 244
- 6.10.1 The legitimate founding of a state — 244
- 6.10.2 The original appropriation of (landed) property — 247
- 6.10.3 An attack on libertarian freedom conceived as individual caprice — 249
- 6.11 A closer look at Rawls — 252
- 6.11.1 The "original position" — 252
- 6.11.2 Property-owning democracy — 257
- 6.12 Anomalies in the gainful game and the political power play — 261

- 7 Interlude and recapitulation with some intermediate conclusions:
Everyday living of finite human beings – Security and insecurity — 267
- 7.1 Securing the polity of civil society – An initial determination of government (Schmitt, Locke, Kant) – The rule of law — 267
- 7.2 Exchange as the starting-point of social living
(Plato, Hegel) — 271
- 7.3 The reliability of things (Heidegger) — 273
- 7.4 Exchange essentially unreliable — 275

- 7.5 Free market exchange as both an unreliable and reliable form of sociation — 277
- 7.6 Money-mediated exchange abstract and reified (Marx) — 279
- 7.7 Risky enterprise and secure jobs — 282
- 8 The short reach of Cartesian certainty and Leibniz' principle of reason into the social science of economics — 285
 - 8.1 Leibniz' principle of reason as a general "grand principle" — 285
 - 8.1.1 Digression: The principle of reason further considered — 286
 - 8.1.1.1 Leibniz — 286
 - 8.1.1.2 Hegel — 289
 - 8.1.1.3 Nietzsche — 291
 - 8.1.1.4 Heidegger — 293
 - 8.1.1.5 Anaximander and the fairness of interplay — 296
 - 8.1.1.6 Deepening the interpretation of Anaximander — 302
 - 8.2 "The economic law of motion of modern society" (Marx) — 311
 - 8.3 Adam Smith's notion of labour-value — 313
 - 8.4 Economics as a quantitative empirical science (Aristotle, Hayek) — 316
 - 8.5 The disclosive truth of markets — 320
 - 8.6 Stock market estimations of the future — 323
 - 8.7 Market irrationality, sentiment and psychology as phenomena of mood — 326
 - 9 Sociation via reified interplay, the invisible and the visible hand — 330
 - 9.1 Social democracy, reified sociating interplay and caring-for in a capitalist economy – Caring for one's own world and indifference to others (Heidegger's Being and Time) — 330
 - 9.2 Self-interest and mutual caring-for in exchange interplay — 340
 - 9.3 Reified sociating interplay and purportedly 'inhuman' alienation of human being — 347
 - 9.4 The wage-labour relation and caring-for – Co-operation and conflict – Hierarchy and reified discipline – Economic democracy and total economic control — 353
 - 9.5 The invisible hand and the ontological possibility of a caring capitalism – Unlimited economic growth through caring for each other — 359

- 9.6 The set-up and the endless cycle of self-augmentation of reified value (Marx, Heidegger) – The historical possibility of the side-step into endless mutual caring-for — 368
- 9.6.1 The gainful game — 369
- 9.6.2 The set-up — 376
- 9.7 State intervention in the economic interplay of civil society — 384
- 9.8 Uncertainty of income-earning – The ‘law’ of social inertia and the tendency toward conservation of a way of life – Openness to the future vs. risk-aversion – The ensconcing of particular interests behind protectionist barriers — 389
- 9.9 The manifestation of the visible hand in the shape of bureaucracy — 398
- 9.10 State intervention as a visible helping hand for the invisible hand – An asserted unconditional right to be cared for – Caring-for that “leaps in” vs. caring-for that “leaps ahead” (Heidegger) — 399
- 9.11 The paternalistic ‘all-caring’ state – Taxation and its tendentially asphyxiating hold on civil society — 405
- 10 Social power and government — 411
- 10.1 Ontology of social power — 411
- 10.1.1 Recapitulation: Various kinds of social power — 423
- 10.1.2 Aristotle on social and political power — 427
- 10.2 Two related social powers: Rhetoric and the political power of government – Legitimacy, punishment, terror — 431
- 10.3 Legitimacy of government further considered – Acceptance and affirmation of government — 439
- 10.4 The “restlesse desire of Power after power” and the necessity of the Leviathan – Straussian “vanity” and the inevitable ongoing mutual estimating of who-status and individual powers – The modern individual subject as the foundation and starting-point for deriving the Leviathan — 445
- 10.5 Legitimacy of the Leviathan – An arbiter in the “Competition of Riches, Honour, Command, or other power” – The predicament that “nothing is more easily broken than a mans word” — 453
- 10.6 The individualization of the truth of being (Protagoras, Heidegger) – The ultimate socio-ontological source of strife – The finite process of resolving differences among individual perspectival views — 459

- 10.7 Ontological powerlessness of the metaphysical, productive conception of power – The ultimate impotence of both political power and rhetoric – Ineluctably sharing an hermeneutic cast of the truth of beings in an historical age – Embeddedness of individual truth in a shared, historically cast truth – The Geist-Zeit and the enpropriation of human being to the clearing of 3D-time – Powerlessly free, mutually estimating power interplay, pluralism and benign indifference – Fairness as the ethereal ethos of a free society — 470
- 11 The socio-ontological constitution of ‘we ourselves’ — 477
- 11.1 Dialectical movement from the sensuous givenness of world to the identity of ego and world – The dialectic of recognition – “Ego that is we and we that is ego” (Hegel’s Phenomenology) — 477
- 11.2 Universal self-consciousness and irrepressible, questioning, singular individuality – The ever-broken mediation between singularity and universality concretely realized in ethical life — 487
- 11.3 The question of who: Selfhood, my self, you-and-I (Heidegger’s 1934 lectures and Being and Time) — 494
- 11.4 How do we ourselves come about? – Belonging together in a situation — 508
- 11.5 Constitution of an historical people – Heidegger’s authoritarian, anti-liberal casting of “we the people” – The historical decision to open up to the future – “We are the coming about of time itself” — 511
- 11.6 We the people and singular, rare individuals – The ethos of open-mindedness – Abstract personhood, interplay through a reified medium and the historical possibility of the free individual – The impossible mediation between universality and singularity – Singularity’s shelter in the abstract rights of particularity – Heidegger’s conjuring of a “fundamental attunement” among the people to support the work of a rare, singular individual — 520
- 11.7 The socio-ontological critique of liberalism – Contract as the abstractly universal shell-form for the metabolism of civil society – The possibility and ethos of a liberal We in free and fair interplay — 530

12 Government and the state — 537

- 12.1 Recapitulation via Locke: The liberal conception of government, its critique and socio-ontological grounding in the power interplay of civil society — 537
- 12.2 The totalitarian state as a counter-casting to liberalism – The yearning for a totally controlled “organic construction” at the pinnacle of productionist metaphysics (Ernst Jünger) — 547
- 12.2.1 Heidegger’s anti-liberal interpretation of the German tradition in 1933 (W. v. Humboldt, Kant, Hegel) — 560
- 12.3 The forever contradictory, moving realization of freedom in civil society and state as power play (Hegel’s Rechtsphilosophie) — 569
- 12.3.1 Diremption of particularity from the universal in civil society and their mediation — 569
- 12.3.2 The police and civic corporation as supplements to the interplay of civil society — 574
- 12.3.3 A problematic transition from civil society to the state – ‘Infinite’, singular affirmation of the concept of freedom through an ethos of free and fair interplay – The chimæra of a final resolution of the power play — 578
- 12.3.4 The inner constitution of the state and the singularity that remains plural – The endlessly contentious issue of taxation – Never-ending controversy over concrete conceptions of the universal good – The two-way power-mediation between civil society and state - The media and freedom of speech — 588
- 12.3.5 Division of powers within the state in accord with the concept of freedom – Hereditary monarchy “outside human freedom” true to the hermeneutic cast of productionist metaphysics – The concept of freedom does not come to a unified closure – The people’s (mis-)trust of the state — 594
- 12.3.6 The transition from civil society to state reconsidered: The power play over sociating estimation and identity in belonging to a political whole – Constitutional rules of play for the ongoing political power struggle — 599
- 12.3.7 The reality of freedom as the shared, ethical social living of a people and its fracturing, through which free societies remain in flux — 602
- 12.3.8 Hegel’s critique of the liberal conception of state – Kant’s “idea of the original contract” — 604

XIV — Content

- 12.3.9 Pre-ontological ethical ‘second nature’ and ontological insight into the political realm — 607
- 12.3.10 The dispensability of the philosopher king and the precipitation of socio-ontological structures in historically lived, ethical usages — 611
- 13 Democracy — 617
 - 13.1 Democracy, competitive electoral struggle and majority will vs. individual freedom — 617
 - 13.1.1 The political power struggle for estimation as a worthy politician – The government’s power to enact concrete policy and its mirroring in democratic public debate – The infection of the universal good with particular interests – Protectionism — 617
 - 13.1.2 The tendential danger of the dissolution of freedom in merely democratically mediated, state-positing will – The erosion of the freedom of interplay through the sham universal of redistributive social justice – Constitutional law as a bulwark against merely positive law — 624
 - 13.1.3 Schumpeter’s competition theory of democracy – The democratic We not merely a summation of individual wills – The legitimacy of democratically elected government – The vacillating vagaries of democratic electoral power struggles – The necessary universality of the democratic vote — 628
 - 13.1.4 The socio-ontological isomorphism between the competitive gainful game and the competitive democratic struggle for political power more closely considered – The democratic constitution of a people as We with its customary way of life – Democracy’s wavering course between an appetite for freedom and a craving for security — 636
 - 13.1.5 Carl Schmitt’s critique of the “parliamentary law-making state” – The contradiction between formal law-making procedures and substantial rights – Direct plebiscitary democracy — 645
 - 13.2 Democracy, freedom and justice: A recapitulation — 658
- 14 Global whoness and global power plays — 666
 - 14.1 Whoness of a people — 666
 - 14.2 The state as the universal that remains particular in the interplay among foreign powers — 671
 - 14.3 Brute international power interplays — 673

14.4	Nationalism, protectionism and free, estimative power interplay among peoples — 675
15	Bibliography — 677
16	Index — 684