

Contents

1	Language change for the worse Dankmar W. Enke, Larry M. Hyman, Johanna Nichols, Guido Seiler & Thilo Weber	1
2	High vowel fricativization in Northern Wú Chinese and its neighbors Matthew Faytak	17
3	Postoralized and devoiced nasals in Panāra (Jê): ND &gt; NT Myriam Lapierre	53
4	Loss of number in the English 2nd person pronoun: A change for the worse, but due to a change for the better? Christine Elsweiler & Judith Huber	89
5	Clitic doubling in Albanian dialects from the perspective of functional transparency Veton Matoshi	113
6	Who needs posterior infinitives? Tabea Reiner	145
7	The particular-characterizing contrast in Marathi and its historical basis Ashwini Deo	181
8	The complexification of Tungusic interrogative systems Andreas Hölzl	211
9	For better and/or for worse: Complexity and person hierarchies Johanna Nichols	243
10	Can language evolution lead to change for the worse? Gerhard Jäger	261

Contents

11 How to use Evolutionary Game Theory to study evolutionary aspects of grammar
Roland Mühlenbernd	281
12 Languages as public goods and language change as a tragedy of the commons
Gerhard Schaden	321
Index	346