

Table of Contents

1	Introduction: Historical narrative	9
1.1	History and historiography	9
1.2	Remembrance, history and memory	12
1.3	Historical narrative	14
1.4	Characteristics of the narrative	16
1.5	Historiography and its alternatives	19
1.6	Fact and fiction	25
1.7	The aim of the book	29
2	History of form and genre	33
2.1	Narrative problems of historiography	33
2.2	Typology	38
2.3	Historical approach	40
2.3.1	André Jolles	40
2.3.2	Biblical exegesis	41
2.3.3	Film analysis	41
2.4	Important forms in historiography	42
2.5	Summary	43
3	Sources and preliminary forms	45
3.1	The history of writing in Rome	45
3.2	Public archives – the written form of administration	46
3.3	Published texts	48
3.4	Family tradition	50
3.5	Priestly archives	54
4	A timeline of Roman historiography	55
4.1	On the road to Roman historiography	55
4.2	Development of literary forms	59
4.3	Chronology	61
4.4	Rome in Greek historiography	62
4.5	Periodisation	62
4.5.1	Early phase and older annals	64
4.5.2	Civil war period	66
4.5.3	Early imperial period	68
4.5.4	The later principate	71
4.5.5	Dominate	72
4.5.6	Late and subantique world and provincial histories	73
5	Caesar’s Commentarii	75
5.1	The politician	75
5.2	Caesar’s religion	78
5.3	Biographical overview	81
5.4	C. Iulii Caesaris commentarii rerum gestarum belli Gallici	82
5.5	Bellum Pompeianum : The so-called ‘civil war’	84

Table of Contents

5.6	The Corpus Caesarianum	85
5.7	Party literature	90
5.8	The further reception history of the Corpus Caesarianum	93
6	Annalists: Livy	95
6.1	Introduction	95
6.2	Life	96
6.3	Plan	97
6.4	Sources and effect	100
6.5	Performance	101
6.6	Livy: An attempt at characterisation	102
6.6.1	Annalist	102
6.6.2	Mythograph	104
6.6.3	Historian	105
6.6.4	Psychologist	108
6.6.5	An Augustan writer	109
7	Historical monographs: Sallustius	113
7.1	The work	113
7.1.1	Bellum Catilinae	113
7.1.2	Bellum Iugurthinum	113
7.1.3	Historiae	114
7.1.4	Sallustius' historiographical place	115
7.2	Biography	116
7.3	Choice of subject	120
7.4	Style	123
7.5	Effect	123
8	Exemplary literature: Valerius Maximus	125
8.1	Exempla and history	125
8.2	Religious and historiographical authority beyond myths	128
9	Senatorial historiography of the imperial era: Tacitus and Ammianus Marcellinus	131
9.1	Senatorial historiography	131
9.2	Tacitus' biography	131
9.3	Motives	132
9.4	Experiments	133
9.4.1	Agricola	133
9.4.2	Germania	134
9.4.3	Dialogue	134
9.4.4	Historiae	134
9.4.5	Annales	135
9.5	Tacitean historiography	136
9.6	Effect	137
9.7	Ammianus Marcellinus	137
9.7.1	Biography	138
9.7.2	Composition	139
9.7.3	Alignment	139

10 Roman history through Greek eyes	143
10.1 Dionysius of Halicarnassus	143
10.2 Appian	145
10.3 Cassius Dio	146
10.4 Herodian	147
11 Biography	149
11.1 Back to narratology	149
11.2 Concepts of biography	151
11.3 Aspects of the history of form	152
11.4 Roman biographers	155
11.5 Biography as specialised literature	156
11.6 Biographies as parenetic literature	160
11.7 Suetonius' career	162
11.8 Suetonius' œuvre	163
11.9 Suetonius as a historian	164
11.10 The Historia Augusta	165
12 Historiographical short forms	169
12.1 Spectrum	169
12.2 Historiography in form of lists	169
12.2.1 The two earliest specimens	170
12.2.2 Fasti Ostienses	172
12.2.3 Fasti in the structure of historiographical genres	173
12.2.4 From Augustan inscriptions to the late antique book market: The Chronograph of 354	176
13 Universal and church history	181
13.1 The meaning of history	181
13.2 Universal history: Pompeius Trogus	183
13.3 Christian universal history	184
13.4 Church history	190
14 The Bible and medieval historiography	197
Selected bibliography	201
Acknowledgement	213
Index	215