

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	11
Foreword: Reading the Satyrica in the 21st Century	13
I Introduction: Theatricality and Narrative Structure in the Satyrica	21
I.1 Aim	21
I.2 Scope	23
I.3 Petronius and the Theatre	24
I.3.1 Theatrical Performances in Petronius' Day	24
I.3.2 Farcical Elements in 'Popular' and 'Literary' Comedy	29
I.4 The Satyrica and the Graeco-Roman Literary Tradition	35
I.4.1 Terminology and Preliminaries	35
I.4.1.1 Intertextuality, Transtextuality and 'Parallels'	35
I.4.1.2 Hypertextuality and Architextuality ('Genre')	36
I.4.2 The Genre of the Satyrica	38
I.4.2.1 Formal and Thematic Characteristics	39
I.4.2.2 The Satyrica as a Parody	43
I.4.2.3 Open Questions	45
I.5 Basic Premises for a Narratological Reading of the Satyrica	47
I.5.1 Protagonist vs. Narrator	48
I.5.2 The Unreliable Narrator and the Implied Author	52
I.5.3 Narrator vs. (Implied) Author	54
I.6 Summary: My Methodological Approach	55
II Overall Aspects: Sexuality in the Satyrica, the 'Idealising' Novel and the Comic Tradition	57
II.1 Problems of Terminology and Categorisation	58

II.2	Indiscriminate Lechery	62
II.2.1	The Evidence of the Satyrice	62
II.2.2	The Evidence of Graeco-Roman Comedy	66
II.3	Other Male-Male Relationships in the Comic Tradition	71
III	First Rivalry over Giton: Encolpius versus Ascyltus (§§ 9–11)	81
III.1	Rape (§ 9.1–5)	89
III.1.1	Sexual Violence in Petronius and in the Comic Tradition	89
III.1.2	Rape and Comic Slave Characters	94
III.1.3	Sexual Rivalry between Two Tarquinius	99
III.1.4	Lucretia on the Ancient Roman Stage	106
III.2	Altercation (§ 9.6–10.7)	109
III.2.1	The Dynamics of Petronian Quarrelling	114
III.2.2	Verbal Duelling in the Comic Tradition	118
	III.2.2.1 Mirroring and Exaggeration	120
	III.2.2.2 Sex and Food	124
	III.2.2.3 The Dynamics of Comic Altercations	129
III.3	Punishment (§ 11.1–4)	135
III.3.1	Μοιχεία and adulterium	138
III.3.2	Adultery and Punishment in the Comic Tradition	143
	III.3.2.1 Laughter	146
	III.3.2.2 Applause	147
	III.3.2.3 Physical Abuse	149
	III.3.2.4 The lorum and the lorarius	154
III.4	Interim Conclusion	157
III.5	Narrative Technique	158
III.5.1	A Narrative Emulating Stage Performances	159
	III.5.1.1 Μίμησις, or: Narrative of Events	159
	III.5.1.2 Paralepsis	162
III.5.2	A Narrative Emancipated from Stage Performances	164
	III.5.2.1 Emphasis: Variations in Speech Representation	165
	III.5.2.2 Condensation: Matters of ‘Visibility’	166
	III.5.2.3 Condensation: Petronius’ ‘punchline’	168
	III.5.2.4 Subjective Storytelling and Foreshadowing	170
III.5.3	The Character of Encolpius as actor and auctor	171
	III.5.3.1 Mythomania	173
	III.5.3.2 The Aim of the Narrator: A Confession or a Piece of Entertainment?	174
	III.5.3.3 The Function of the Narrator	176

IV	Reconciliation: Encolpius and Giton (§ 91)	179
IV.1	The Charms of Giton	182
IV.1.1	Encolpius in Control	182
IV.1.2	Giton in Control	184
IV.2	The Charms of Comic Prostitutes and pueri delicati	187
IV.2.1	The meretrix callida , or: The Art of Seduction	190
IV.2.2	Pistoclerus in Control (Plaut. Bacch. 39b–73a)	191
IV.2.3	Bacchis in Control (Plaut. Bacch. 73b–104)	197
IV.2.4	Parallels in Other Comedies	202
IV.3	Interim Conclusion	207
IV.4	Narrative Technique	208
IV.4.1	A Narrative Emulating Stage Performances	209
IV.4.1.1	Μίμησις: Seeing and Hearing the Story	209
IV.4.1.2	Paralepsis: The Thin Line between Emotions and Appearances	210
IV.4.2	A Narrative Emancipated from Stage Performances	212
IV.4.2.1	Emphasis and Condensation: Focus on Emotions and Power Relations	212
IV.4.2.2	Symmetry	213
IV.4.3	The Character of Encolpius as actor and auctor	215
IV.4.3.1	Irony in the Satyrice	215
IV.4.3.2	Distinguishing between the Protagonist and the Narrator	219
IV.4.3.3	The Implied Author and the Issue of Comic Irony	221
IV.4.3.4	The Ever-Changing Function of the Narrator	224
V	Third Rivalry over Giton: Encolpius versus Eumolpus (§§ 92–96)	227
V.1	Lecherous Old Men (§ 92.1–94.7)	235
V.1.1	Eumolpus	235
V.1.2	Lecherous Old Men in Comedy	243
V.1.2.1	The senex amator	244
V.1.2.2	Plautus' Mercator : A Comedy of Errors	245
V.1.2.3	Plautus' Asinaria : An Unexpected Rival	246
V.1.2.4	Other Parallels between Eumolpus and Comic senes amatores	248
V.2	Suicidal Lovers (§ 94.8–15)	251
V.2.1	Encolpius and Giton	251
V.2.2	Suicidal Lovers in the Comic Tradition	255
V.2.2.1	Deadly Desperation	255
V.2.2.2	A Suicidal Contest in Plautus' Asinaria	258

V.3	A Spectacular Brawl (§ 95.1–96.7)	264
V.3.1	Eumolpus against the Rest	264
V.3.2	Spectacular Brawls in Comedy	266
V.3.2.1	Jugs, Jars and Pots	267
V.3.2.2	Armies, Battles and Weapons	268
V.3.2.3	Schadenfreude and Ill-Timed Compassion	271
V.4	Interim Conclusion	274
V.5	Narrative Technique	275
V.5.1	A Narrative Emulating Stage Performances	276
V.5.2	A Narrative Emancipated from Stage Performances	277
V.5.2.1	Emphasis and Condensation: Giving the Stage to Giton	277
V.5.2.2	Subjective Storytelling: Encolpius Making Sense of the World around Him	279
V.5.3	The Character of Encolpius as actor and auctor	282
V.5.3.1	The ‘Mastermind’ behind the Charade	282
V.5.3.2	The Presence of the Narrator	283
V.5.3.3	Self-Irony and the Character of the Narrator	284
V.5.3.4	Summary: The Function of the Narrator	285
VI	Synopsis and Conclusion	287
VI.1	Comic Elements	287
VI.2	Narrator and Narrative Technique	291
VI.2.1	Stage-Like Storytelling	291
VI.2.2	Manipulations of the Story	293
VI.2.3	The Character and Function of Encolpius the Narrator	296
VI.2.3.1	Encolpius Making a Confession	296
VI.2.3.2	Mythomaniac Encolpius	297
VI.2.3.3	Self-Ironic Encolpius	299
VI.2.3.4	The Function of the Narrator	300
VII	Final Remarks: The Sex Life of Petronius’ Characters	303
	Bibliography	307
	The Satyrica : Text Editions, Commentaries and Translations	307
	Reference Works	308
	Primary Literature and Translations	308
	Secondary literature	313
	Passages Cited	337