Introduction — 1

Part I: Setting the scene: Child EFL learners and writing

Chapter 1

It all starts here — 9

- 1.1 The rationale behind early language learning — 9
- 1.2 What is a young learner? — 11
- 1.3 Contrasting pathways: Child versus adult L2 acquisition — 12
- 1.4 Exploring child FL acquisition: Uncharted avenues and future directions — 15
- 1.5 Conclusion — 21

Chapter 2

Theoretical perspectives on the language-learning potential of written corrective feedback: Laying the foundations — 23

- 2.1 The (questionable?) role of (W)CF — 24
- 2.2 The cognitive perspective on WCF — 26
 - 2.2.1 The interaction model — 27
 - 2.2.1.1 Input — 28
 - 2.2.1.2 Output as a noticing facilitator — 28
 - 2.2.1.3 Noticing and WCF — 29
 - 2.2.1.4 Feedback in writing — 33
 - 2.2.2 Writing as a focus on form intervention — 34
 - 2.2.2.1 The need for FonF — 35
 - 2.2.2.2 Types of FonF — 36
 - 2.2.2.3 Operationalizing FonF: Language-related episodes — 42
 - 2.2.3 Skill learning theory — 45
- 2.3 The sociocultural perspective on WCF — 46
 - 2.3.1 Collaborative writing — 48
 - 2.3.1.1 Collaborative processing of feedback — 49
 - 2.3.1.2 Patterns of interaction — 51
 - 2.3.1.3 Research on collaborative writing — 52
- 2.4 Stages in the processing of WCF — 55
- 2.5 Conclusion — 61

Chapter 3

Implementing WCF in the L2 classroom: Exploring alternatives — 64

- 3.1 Types of WCF and their limitations — 64
- 3.2 Model texts as a written corrective feedback alternative — 67
 - 3.2.1 Empirical research on models — 69
- 3.3 Conclusion — 103

Chapter 4

Task motivation and model texts — 105

- 4.1 The rationale behind task motivation — 105
- 4.2 Research with adults — 107
- 4.3 Research with children — 108
- 4.4 Conclusion — 114

Part II: Turning theory into action: Blending all the ingredients

Chapter 5

Method — 119

- 5.1 Participants and setting — 122
- 5.2 Research design — 124
- 5.3 Data collection — 127
 - 5.3.1 Training session — 127
 - 5.3.2 Cycle 1 — 128
 - 5.3.3 Inter-cycle intervention — 131
 - 5.3.4 Cycle 2 — 133
 - 5.3.5 Questionnaire and focus group interviews — 133
- 5.4 Data analysis — 134
 - 5.4.1 Analyzing noticing and the oral-written connection — 135
 - 5.4.2 Analysis of written production — 149
 - 5.4.2.1 Type of clause — 149
 - 5.4.2.2 CAF measures — 150
 - 5.4.2.3 Holistic measures — 152
 - 5.4.2.4 Analysis of input enhancement — 153
 - 5.4.3 Analysis of children's motivation and perceptions — 153

Chapter 6

What we discovered and why — 154

- 6.1 Module 1: Oral-written connection — 154
 - 6.1.1 Summary of the main findings for research question 1 — 154
 - 6.1.2 Discussion of research question 1 — 157
 - 6.1.3 Summary of the main findings for research question 2 — 164
 - 6.1.4 Discussion of research question 2 — 166
- 6.2 Module 2: The effects of models on the children’s written production — 175
 - 6.2.1 Summary of the main findings for research question 3 — 175
 - 6.2.2 Discussion of research question 3 — 176
 - 6.2.3 Summary of the main findings for research question 4 — 181
 - 6.2.4 Discussion of research question 4 — 181
- 6.3 Module 3: Learners’ task motivation and perceptions — 186
 - 6.3.1 Summary of the main findings for research question 5 — 186
 - 6.3.2 Discussion of research question 5 — 188
- 6.4 Conclusion — 195

Part III: Coming to an ‘end’spiration, with conclusions and contributions to existing research

Chapter 7

Conclusions, contributions to the literature, implications and lines for future research — 201

- 7.1 Conclusions — 201
- 7.2 Pedagogical implications — 203
 - 7.2.1 The language-learning potential of model texts — 204
 - 7.2.2 Form-focused intervention — 206
 - 7.2.3 Perceptions and motivation — 207
 - 7.2.4 Enhancing EFL instructional materials for young learners — 208
- 7.3 Limitations of the study — 211
- 7.4 Future research directions — 212
