
Contents

1	Introduction	1
1.1	Object of Study and Research Interest	2
1.2	Research Questions	5
1.3	State of Research and Own Contribution	9
1.4	Scientific Understanding and Positionality	12
1.5	Outline of the Study	14
	References	16
2	Research Design	23
2.1	Overview of Theoretical Foundation and Conceptual Framework	23
2.2	Hegemony Analysis	27
2.2.1	Discourse, Articulations and Demands	27
2.2.2	Subjectivation and Gendered Subject Positions	29
2.2.3	The Discursive Construction of International Actors' Identities	32
2.2.4	The Offensive-Hegemonic Strategy and its Strategemes	36
2.3	Ecofeminism: on the Nexus of Gender and Nature	41
2.3.1	The Genesis of Ecofeminism	42
2.3.2	Towards Poststructural Approaches in Ecofeminism	46
2.3.3	Gendered Discourses and Climate Change Policy	52

2.4	Conducting Ecofeminist Hegemony Analysis	57
2.4.1	The Six Steps of Hegemony Analysis	57
2.4.2	Data Selection and Construction of Discourse Corpus	61
	References	64
3	The Indian Climate Policy Identity and its Gendered Components	73
3.1	The Genesis of India’s Climate Change Governance in an International Context	74
3.1.1	India on the Global Stage until 2010	76
3.1.2	Indian Climate Change Governance on a National Level	81
3.2	India’s Gendered Climate Change Discourse: (Co-) Benefitting from Sustainable Development and a Significant Role	88
3.2.1	The Different Facets of Sustainable Development	90
3.2.2	Back to the Roots? Climate Justice in the Indian Discourse	101
3.2.3	Everything New with Modi?	108
3.2.4	India in Paris: A Spiritually-Grounded Developing Country?	118
3.2.5	The State Action Plans: Winning Women for Work	128
3.2.6	India as a Developing Country Striving for a Significant International Role	131
3.2.7	The 2019 Elections and Beyond: Striving for a Culturally-Underpinned Significant Role	138
3.2.8	Strategeme X: Rethinking the Offensive-Hegemonic Strategy	154
3.3	The Gendered Indian Climate Policy Identity: Between Sustainable Development and a Significant Indian Role	162
3.3.1	Masculinised Sustainable Development for All	163
3.3.2	Gendered Cultural Roots Shaping the Indian Climate Change Identity under Modi	169
	References	177

4	Dismantling the EU's Gendered Climate Policy Identity	199
4.1	The EU's Climate Governance and Policy until 2010	201
4.1.1	The EU at the Global High Table of Climate Governance	202
4.1.2	Milestones of EU Climate Policy until 2010	206
4.1.3	The Multi-Level Governance System of EU Climate Policy	210
4.2	The EU's Gendered Climate Change Discourse: Leadership Revisited	217
4.2.1	(Re-)Orientation after Copenhagen	220
4.2.2	The EU and the Green Economy—an Idea whose Time Has Come?	229
4.2.3	From Warsaw to Paris: Future EU Goals in Limbo?	243
4.2.4	The EU towards and in Paris: Co-Building Alliances to Lead the Way	263
4.2.5	The EU after Paris: A Changing Global Context—A Changing EU Identity?	275
4.2.6	Meeting the Growing Public Pressure to Set the Course for the Implementation of the Paris Goals	287
4.2.7	The European Green Deal: Making Hay While the Sun Shines	295
4.2.8	The Corona Crisis Meets the Climate Crisis—and a Way to Build Back Better?	308
4.2.9	2021: Bringing the European Green Deal to Life	319
4.3	The Gendered EU Climate Policy Identity	331
4.3.1	The EU Identity until Paris: Old Masculinised Demands in New Bottles?	336
4.3.2	Leadership through Ecomodern Masculinity with a Pinch of Feminised Demands	341
	References	352
5	Conclusion	389
5.1	The Gendered Climate Policy Identities of India and the EU	390
5.2	Understanding Climate Policy Identities through an Ecofeminist Hegemony Analysis	393
5.3	Implications of Gendered Climate Policy Identities at Bilateral and Global Levels	398
	References	402