

CONTENTS

Foreword.....	v
Acknowledgements	vii
Abbreviations.....	ix
1 Introduction	1
2 Approaching the role of state-led rural urbanization for China's landless peasants	19
2.1 China's landless peasants and the role of state-led rural urbanization: A literature review	21
2.1.1 Conceptualizing China's state-led rural urbanization	23
2.1.2 Conceptualizing China's landless peasants	42
2.1.3 The (constructed) role of state-led rural urbanization for China's landless peasants and the puzzle of social stability	56
2.2 A new perspective: The role of state-led rural urbanization in landless peasants' own narratives.....	71
2.2.1 Persisting research gaps	71
2.2.2 Aims and research questions of the present study	75
3 Reconstructing the role of state-led rural urbanization from landless peasants' narratives	79
3.1 A "narrative-aware" grounded theory approach to the analysis of narratives	81
3.1.1 Grounded theory methodology: An overview	82
3.1.2 Towards a "narrative-aware" grounded theory methodology	85
3.2 Fieldwork and data collection	87
3.2.1 Developing my research questions over two stages of fieldwork	88
3.2.2 My roles, interactions, and ethical considerations in the field	90
3.2.3 Triangulating participant observation and semi-narrative interviews	95
3.3 Data analysis	101

3.3.1	Sensitizing my grounded theory analysis towards aspects of narrativity	101
3.3.2	Coding procedure	103
4	The local context: Compressed and “constructed” urbanization in Huaming model town, Dongli district, Tianjin.....	107
4.1	Compressed modernization in Dongli’s countryside	110
4.1.1	Life in rural Dongli prior to Building a New Socialist Countryside.....	112
4.1.2	State-led rural urbanization through the “Huaming mode”: Concept, implementation, outcomes	115
4.1.3	Everyday life in Huaming a decade after relocation	129
4.2	Narratives surrounding the role of state-led rural urbanization for Huaming’s landless peasants	141
4.2.1	The utopian official narrative	143
4.2.2	The dystopian counternarrative	157
5	Landless peasants’ subjective evaluations of state-led rural urbanization in Huaming	165
5.1	Preface: On gathering critical opinions related to Huaming’s state-led rural urbanization.....	167
5.2	Evaluating Huaming’s urbanization policy and its implementation	175
5.2.1	Expressing intrinsic (un-)willingness to relocate	177
5.2.2	Evaluating the adequacy of “exchanging homestead for apartment”	183
5.2.3	Evaluating compensation conditions for the land.....	197
5.2.4	Denouncing distorted and corrupted policy implementation in Huaming	203
5.3	Evaluating the outcomes of Huaming’s urbanization policy	206
5.3.1	Evaluating livelihood security and occupational options without the land.....	208
5.3.2	Evaluating “apartment living” and social relations in Huaming	231
5.3.3	Evaluating “retirement life” in Huaming.....	243
5.3.4	Evaluating educational quality and chances in Huaming	254

5.3.5	Same land, different life? Evaluating the outcomes of Huaming's urbanization policy in a comprehensive sense	257
5.4	Conclusion: State-led rural urbanization as an inter-subjective experience: Explaining commonalities and faultlines in landless peasants' evaluations	269
6	Landless peasants' self-conceptions and social positionings in Huaming's urban environment	279
6.1	Place-based identity: Landless peasants' ambiguous self-conceptions as " bendiren " in Huaming a decade after relocation	281
6.1.1	The meanings of " bendiren " in the spatio-temporal context at hand	284
6.1.2	Huaming's " bendiren ": What unites and what divides the "people from this place"	293
6.2	Citizenship-based identity: The (in-)significance of hukou conversion for landless peasants' self-conceptions	307
6.2.1	The insignificance of urban hukou for feeling "urban" overall	310
6.2.2	The role of citizenship-based entitlements for feeling "institutionally urban"	312
6.3	Class-based identity: Social positionings and narratives of distinction among Huaming's landless peasants	320
6.3.1	The narrative construction of "classes" within Huaming's local population	325
6.3.2	The discourse of self-responsibility for one's life and place in society	338
6.4	Conclusion: Differentiated identity development in the wake of state-led rural urbanization: What China's landless peasants are becoming as a social group	343
7	Retrospective meanings of state-led rural urbanization in the lives of individual landless peasants	349
7.1	State-led rural urbanization as a turning point	353
7.1.1	State-led rural urbanization as an important turning point for the better	353

7.1.2	State-led rural urbanization as an important turning point for the worse	362
7.1.3	State-led rural urbanization as just one among several turning points in life	373
7.2	State-led rural urbanization as a transition	384
7.2.1	State-led rural urbanization as just an external transition in a continuing life trajectory	385
7.2.2	State-led rural urbanization as just an external transition coinciding with an (upward) development trajectory	395
7.3	Conclusion: Turning points, transitions, and state-led rural urbanization as part of the ongoing life story: Putting the experienced transformations into a larger perspective	406
8	Conclusion.....	411
	Appendix	427
	A Overview of main informants	427
	B Figures	433
	C Summary of results	441
	References	445