

Contents

Acknowledgements	XI
Introduction	XII
1. COVID-19, the protests of 2020 and crackdown on civil society today	1
1.1 Introduction	1
1.2 What new we learned about Belarus since 2020	3
1.3 The coronavirus pandemic and the protests of August 2020	7
1.4 Belarusian Churches and the protests	9
1.5 Studying Protestant minorities in Belarus	10
1.6 What is this book about	14
1.7 The structure of the book	20
2. Social capital, Protestant congregations and social change	23
2.1 Introduction	23
2.2 The mystery of social capital: the five blind men and the elephant	24
2.3 Practicalities of studying of social capital	28
2.4 Civil society versus social capital	32
2.5 Congregations as generators of social capital	37
2.6 How can religion spur social change?	43
2.7 Conclusion	48
3. Studying religion and social capital in an authoritarian context	51
3.1 Introduction	51
3.2 Congregations as case studies	57
3.3 Protestant congregations as ‘gated’ communities	59
3.4 Multilingual research in Belarus	63
3.5 ‘Who am I in the field?’ and knowledge production	64
3.6 Conclusion	66
4. The Belarusian paradox	67
4.1 National identity and civil society	67
4.2 Civil society in Belarus	75
4.3 Has religion revived after the collapse of the Soviet Union?	80
4.4 The roots of Protestantism in Belarus	83

4.5	The religious boom in 1990s Belarus	85
4.6	Protestant minorities in Belarusian society	88
4.7	Conclusion	93
5.	Protestant lifestyle	94
5.1	Introduction	94
5.2	'Finding God' in Belarus: the narratives	96
5.3	Godly order in the secular Belarus	109
5.4	The meaning of congregation for individuals	117
5.5	Is Protestantism indigenous in Belarusian culture?	119
5.6	Protestantism as a social force in a rural context	124
5.6.1	The Protestant family cycle	128
5.6.2	The work cycle	131
5.7	Conclusion	135
6.	Belarusian Protestants and civic engagement	137
6.1	Introduction	137
6.2	Civic engagement – what does it mean in the Belarusian context?	138
6.3	The Soviet burden	142
6.4	The ideal model of the state-religion relationship	145
6.5	Protestant mission vis-à-vis the state and society	149
6.5.1	'Jesus Christ, Belarusian language and national symbols'	152
6.5.2	Mission impossible: the protection of Kurapaty memorial site	155
6.6	Acting through praying?	160
6.7	Conclusion	163
7.	Sociability within the congregation	166
7.1	Introduction	166
7.2	Congregations help develop relationships	167
7.3	The power structure of congregation	173
7.4	Trust and solidarity: not in shortage among Protestants?	181
7.5	Conclusion	188
8.	Social capital and Protestant congregations in Belarus	191
8.1	In what ways can Belarusian Protestants push for social change?	191
8.2	Key contributions of this book	196

8.3 Studying similar sensitive contexts 198

8.4 Limitations of the study and future research 200

Postscriptum 202

 Three pastors and peppers 202

Fieldnotes sample 204

References 206