
Contents

1	Introduction and Research Question	1
1.1	State of Research	9
1.2	Explanatory Model	15
1.3	Dissertation Outline and Main Contributions	18
 Part I Theoretical Foundations
2	The Two-Level-Game Approach as an Analytical Framework	25
2.1	The Concept of Domestic Ratification	27
2.2	The Concept of a Government's Domestic Win-Set	31
2.3	The Concept of a Government's Acceptability-Set	34
2.4	Preference Constellations	35
2.5	Government Actors	37
2.6	Domestic Constituencies, Their Resources, and Strategies	43
3	The Two-Level Game Approach in Contested Territory	69
3.1	Rationalist Foundations	70
3.2	Dealing with Uncertainty and Ambiguity in International Bargaining	73
3.3	Preference Formation of State Actors and Commercial Actors	77
3.4	An Empirical-Inductive Approach to Determining Preferences	83
3.5	Formulation of Three Research Hypotheses	87

Part II Empirical Analysis—From Corporate Perceptions to Corporate Preferences

4	Aggregate Perceptions and Levels of Participation	91
4.1	Introduction	91
4.2	Survey Periods and Panel Composition	92
4.3	GCA Perceptions of the BRI	96
4.4	ECA Perceptions of the BRI	97
4.5	GCA and ECA Perceptions Compared	98
4.6	GCA Participation in the BRI	99
4.7	ECA Participation in the BRI	103
4.8	GCA and ECA Participation Compared	103
4.9	The Losing Majority and their Preferences Concerning the BRI	105
4.10	The Winning Few and their Preferences Concerning the BRI	109
4.11	Conclusion	113
5	Qualitative Case Studies	117
5.1	Introduction	117
5.2	On the Iron Silk Road: Deutsche Bahn's Success in a Niche Business	118
5.3	Siemens as a Co-Creator of the BRI	138
5.4	Conclusion	156

Part III Empirical Analysis—Germany's Political Bargain as a Struggle Among Competing Responses

6	A Leap of Faith: Germany's Response (2013–2015)	161
6.1	Introduction	161
6.2	Salience of Chinese Politics of Infrastructure Investments for German Corporate Actors	162
6.3	Salience of Chinese Politics of Infrastructure Investments for the Bundestag	171
6.4	Germany's Acceptability-Set	174
6.5	Response Case Study I: Ratification of Germany's Accession to the AIIB	177
6.6	Conclusion	191

7	The Logic of Compartmentalization: Germany’s Response (2016–2018)	195
7.1	Introduction	195
7.2	Germany’s Acceptability-Set	198
7.3	Salience of Chinese Politics of Infrastructure Investments for German Corporate Actors	215
7.4	Salience of Chinese Infrastructure Investment Politics for the Bundestag	229
7.5	Response Case Study II: The Wake-Up Call — Unwelcome Investments in Germany	236
7.6	Response Case Study III: Economic Security at Risk — Chinese Influence in Southeast Europe	250
7.7	Conclusion	279
8	The Unsolved Dilemma: Germany’s Response (2019–2021)	283
8.1	Introduction	283
8.2	Salience of Chinese Politics of Infrastructure Investments for German Corporate Actors	284
8.3	Salience of Chinese Politics of Infrastructure Investments for the Bundestag	290
8.4	Germany’s Acceptability-Set	295
8.5	Response Case Study IV: Germany’s “Lex Huawei”—a Late Response to China’s Digital Silk Road	298
8.6	Conclusion	328
9	Conclusion	331
	Publication Bibliography	349