

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. Introduction	1
2. Theoretical Framework	9
2.1. What is History?	9
2.1.1. History vs. Historiography	12
2.1.2. Subjectivity and Unavailability of Sources: A Historical Truth Never Completed	14
2.2. Towards the Writing of ‘Other’ Historiographies	15
2.2.1. Revisionism and Speculation in Historical Fiction	17
2.2.2. Counterfactual History: An Instrument from Academic Historiography	20
2.3. The Genre: Uchronia or Alternate History?	21
2.3.1. Etymology, Origins, and Development	21
2.3.2. Features of Alternate Histories	25
2.3.3. Classifications	27
2.3.4. A Family Tree for Uchronias	31
2.3.5. What if...Women had Written Uchronias?	32
2.4. Gender Criticism and the Literary Female Tradition	35
2.5. Feminist Narratology	36
3. Uchronian Narratives Of Political Power: Narrating the Political Woman in Eleanor vs. Ike	41
3.1. Dilemmas of a Political Uchronia or Eleanor vs. Eleanor	44
3.1.1. Womanhood vs. Political Womanhood	44
3.1.2. The Male Shadow vs. Women’s Own Merits	47
3.1.3. Exceptionality or Dewomanization	51
3.1.4. (Positive) Political Womanhood and (Unconvincing) Political Manhood	55

- 3.2. Between Political Women and Political Wives 57
 - 3.2.1. Political Women: Suffragism as a First Step 59
 - 3.2.2. Political Wives or ‘Behind Every Great Man...’ 63
- 3.3. Conclusion of the Chapter 69

- 4. Uchronian Narratives of Agency and Otherness:
Between ‘Angels’ and ‘Madwomen’ in The Big Lie 71
- 4.1. The Angel in the House and the Madwoman 74
- 4.2. Angels in the House 75
 - 4.2.1. Jessika Keller: The Heroine that Never Was 77
 - 4.2.2. Miriam Keller: The ‘Perfect’ Angel in the House 84
- 4.3. Madwomen on the Block 87
 - 4.3.1. Frau Hart: Producing a ‘Madwoman’ 88
 - 4.3.2. Clementine Hart: Young ‘Madwomen’ and Martyrdom 93
 - 4.3.3. Neither Angels nor Demons:
Representations of In-betweenness 98
- 4.4. Conclusion of the Chapter 102

- 5. Uchronian Spaces for Women:
Agency and the Semanticization of Space in My Real Children 105
- 5.1. Space as a Narrative Continuum:
Domestic Spheres – Public Spheres 108
- 5.2. The Divergent Private Sphere: Houses as (un)safe Spaces 109
 - 5.2.1. The House in the Timeline of Tricia: Oppression 110
 - 5.2.2. The House in the Timeline of Pat: Freedom 115
- 5.3. Conquering the Public Sphere: The City as Emancipation 118
 - 5.3.1. The City in the Timeline of Tricia: Liberating Herself 119
 - 5.3.2. The City in the Timeline of Pat: Full Agency 125
- 5.4. Expanding the Public Sphere: The ‘World’ as a Place to (Un)belong ... 129
 - 5.4.1. The ‘World’ in the Timeline of Tricia: A Distant Idea 130
 - 5.4.2. The ‘World’ in the Timeline of Pat: Creating New Identities ... 131
- 5.5. Conclusion of the Chapter 136

6. Discovering the Female Uchronic Tradition:
 Other Female-authored Alternate Histories 139

6.1. The Enemy Within (2014) by Kristine Kathryn Rusch 139

6.2. The Professor in Erin (1918) by Charlotte Elizabeth McManus
 (L. McManus) 140

6.3. Margot (2013) by Jillian Cantor 142

6.4. Rodham (2020) by Curtis Sittenfeld 144

6.5. The Children’s War (2001) by J.N. Stroyar 145

7. Outlook and Concluding Remarks 149

8. Works Cited 163