

Table of Contents

Introduction	1
A. Dynamic Purchasing Systems in EU Procurement Law since 2004	1
B. The 2014 EU Procurement Law Reform: Making Dynamic Purchasing Systems Attractive?	3
C. Remaining Deficiencies in the EU's 2014 Dynamic Purchasing System: Brexit as an Opportunity for an Improved British Version	5
D. Aim and Scope of the Study	6
First EU Procurement Law Chapter:	9
A. Core Features of the Dynamic Purchasing System	9
B. Legal Nature of the Dynamic Purchasing System: Not a Sui Generis Type of Procurement Procedures	10
C. Setting Up and Use of the Dynamic Purchasing System	11
I. Two Stages of a Dynamic Purchasing System	11
1. First Stage: Establishment of a Dynamic Purchasing System	12
2. Second Stage: Awarding Individual Contracts within a Dynamic Purchasing System	14
a) Difference in Form not in Substance between Member States	14
b) Award of Individual Contracts: Framework Agreements under Dynamic Purchasing Systems Inadmissible	16

Table of Contents

II. Further Key Feature: Open and Free of Charge Access	17
D. Unanswered Legal Questions and Practical Application Issues	17
I. (Un-)Limited Duration of the System?!	18
II. Prerequisites for the Application: Which Purchases are 'Generally Available on the Market'?	23
1. Suitability Especially for Standard Supply and Service Contracts	23
2. Applicability also to Describable Intellectual Services and Works	24
a) EU Legislator's Intention: No General Exclusion for Services and Works	26
b) German and British Interpretation of the EU Law: 'Simple' Intellectual Services Admissible	29
III. Applicability of Dynamic Purchasing Systems in Defence and Security Procurement	32
1. Applicability without (Explicit) Mention in Directive 2009/81?	33
2. National Implementation: Dynamic Purchasing Systems in German Defence and Security Procurement Law	35
3. Conclusion: Practical Considerations and Potential Benefits of Dynamic Purchasing Systems in Defence and Security Procurement	37
E. Conclusion	38
 Second UK Procurement Law
Chapter:	41
A. Core Features of Dynamic Markets	41
I. Brexit and the Consequences for Public Procurement Law in the UK	41

Table of Contents

II. Unlimited Material Scope of Application of Dynamic Markets	43
1. Application to Contract Types: Recurring Procurements but also Complex Projects	44
2. Unlimited Duration of Dynamic Markets	47
B. Setting Up and Use of Dynamic Markets	48
I. Two Stages	48
1. First Stage: Establishing a Dynamic Market	49
2. Second Stage: Awarding Individual Contracts	50
a) Awarding Only 'by Reference to' a Dynamic Market	50
b) Awarding Through a Competitive Flexible Procedure at the Contracting Authority's Discretion	51
II. Fees for Participants as an Obstacle to Competition?	53
C. Conclusion	55
I. Extended Material Scope Requires Precedents	55
II. Other Practical Questions to Clarify in Practice	55
1. How Do Contracting Authorities Use the Flexible Procurement Procedure?	55
2. Do Fees for Successful Suppliers Hinder Competition?	56
3. Application of Dynamic Markets in Security and Defence Procurement under the Procurement Act 2023?	57
a) Revoked Special Regime of EU-Inspired Defence and Security Public Contracts Regulations 2011	58
b) Dynamic Markets in Defence and Security Procurement? Not Explicitly Permitted – But Not Excluded Either	58
c) Conclusion: Practical Considerations and Potential Benefits of Dynamic Markets in Defence and Security Procurement	60

Table of Contents

Third	Comparison and Conclusion
Chapter:		63
A.	The (Not Really) ‘Dynamic’ Purchasing System under EU Law	63
B.	Dynamic Markets as an Evolution of Dynamic Purchasing Systems: Also a Revolution in Strategic Procurement?	64
	Bibliography	67
	Index	71