

Table of Contents

Foreword

The Future of Activity Theory Is Happening By Yrjö Engeström 15

Chapter 1 Introduction

Unity and Diversity of Cultural-Historical Activity

Theory 19

What Is Cultural-Historical Activity Theory? 20

The Difficulties Behind CHAT Appropriation 24

The Antecedent of Cultural-Historical Activity

Theory: The Theses on Feuerbach 29

Activity as a Collective Process of Transformation 32

The Author's Position 35

Book Structure 36

Part 1 Four Generations of Cultural-Historical Activity Theory

Introduction to Part 1 41

Chapter 2 The First Generation of CHAT and the Vygotskian

Revolution 45

The Main Scientific Milestones in Vygotsky's Career 48

Vygotsky's Cultural-Historical Approach: A Basis for Further Development 57

The Need to Expand the Unit of Analysis? 70

Chapter 3 The Second Generation of CHAT: Leontiev's Work ...	73
When Cultural-Historical Theory Becomes Activity Theory: The Kharkov School	73
Leontiev's Stages in the Formation of the Activity Concept	79
Leontiev's Specific Features of Human Activity	81
Human Activity Is Collective. The Multiplicity of Interpretations of the Hunting Example	90
The Hierarchical Structure of Human Activity	95
The Relationship Between Activity and Actions	96
The Relationship Between Actions and Operations	97
The Dual Dynamic of Activity Development	101
Leontiev's Contribution To CHAT	102
Some Criticisms of Leontiev's Approach	104
 Chapter 4 Third Generation of CHAT: From the Development of Mind to the Development of Activity in Engeström Work	 107
Context: The Difficult Transformation of Teaching Practices	108
A Response to Mainstream Cognitivism	113
Collective Activity as Unit of Analysis	117
The Activity System	120
Activity System as an Ideal Type	131
The Dynamic Dimension of an Activity System	132
Four Uses of the Activity System	135
Extending Activity Theory to the Third Generation	137
Benefits and Risks of Extending the Analysis Unit	139
Some Criticisms of Engeström's Approach	147
Engeström's Contributions to CHAT	154
 Chapter 5 Towards a Fourth Generation of CHAT? Sannino and Real Utopias	 157
Current Social Issues... And Their Systemic Causes	157
New Information and Communication Technologies: An Opportunity to Transform CHAT?	160

The ‘Runaway Object’	165
Inclusion in an Emancipatory Social Science: Real Utopias	167
Eradicating Homelessness and Sannino’s Work	169
Critical Discussions on the Fourth Generation of Activity Theory	172
Conclusion	173
Conclusion of Part 1	175
Back to the Idea of CHAT Generations	175
Some Typical Features of a Common Parentage	177
 Part 2 Four Central Concepts for Analyzing Activity
Introduction to Part 2	183
Chapter 6 The Object of Activity	187
The Concept of Object and Its Importance for Chat	187
Differentiate the Object of Activity From the Goal of Actions	191
The Characteristics of the Object of Activity Through Six Principles	195
There Is No Objectless Activity: From Object to Activity Delimitation	198
The Controversy Over the Notion of Object	202
Identifying Objects and Their Evolution in Empirical Research	205
 Chapter 7 The Concept of Contradiction	 211
The Concept of Contradiction: A Dialectical Concept	212
Contradictions as the Driving Force Behind the Development of Activity Systems	215
Observable Symptoms and Manifestations of Contradictions	220
Experiencing Contradictions	224

Contradictions Are Not Problems, But Their Systemic Causes	226
From Manifestations to Contradictions in Activity Analysis	229
Identifying Developmental Periods and Contradictions in Historical Analysis	233
Four Forms of Contradiction	234
To Sum Up	240
 Chapter 8 Expansive Learning. Learning What Is Not Yet There	 243
Expansive Learning Versus Other Forms of Learning ..	243
The Expansion Metaphor	249
Theoretical Sources of Inspiration for Expansive Learning Theory	252
Expansive Learning as a Process: The Expansive Learning Cycle	256
Expansive Learning as the Construction of a Zone of Proximal Development	257
Expansive and Defensive Learning	258
Expansive Learning Scales and Their Articulation	259
Analyzing Expansive Learning	264
Transformative Agency as a Trigger for Expansive Learning	270
 Chapter 9 Development as Qualitative Reorganization	 273
The Problematic Nature of a Polysemic, Totemic Concept	274
Four Dimensions of Development to Discuss	277
 Conclusion of Part 2	 291

Part 3 The Interventionist Dimension of Chat: Formative Intervention and Change Laboratory

Introduction to Part 3 295

Chapter 10 The Change Laboratory Methodology 299

 The Epistemological Legitimacy of Interventionist Research 300

 Key Principles of Formative Intervention Methodology 306

 Material Organization of the Change Laboratory 307

 Methodological Principles of a Change Laboratory 310

 The Principle of Double Stimulation 328

 Transformative Agency 335

 The Change Laboratory Versus Some Intervention Principles 336

 Key Tasks and Artifacts in a Change Laboratory 342

 The Phase Before Change Laboratory 348

 Some Examples of Change Laboratories 349

Chapter 11 Formative Interventions in Relation to Other Interventionist Approaches 351

 In Search of an Analytical Framework for Comparing Approaches 353

 Design Based Research 356

 Participatory Design 366

 Participatory Action Research 377

 Towards Forms of Hybridization? 386

Conclusion of Part 3 391

Conclusion: The Urgency of Expansive Learning in the 21st Century 393

Postface

The where-to of 4th generation culturalhistorical activity theory
By Annalisa Sannino 395

References 399

Table of Illustrations 441

Table of Tables 445

Acknowledgements 447