

Table of content

I. Acknowledgements	7
II. List of Figures and Tables	9
1. Introduction	13
Raising the Subject	14
A Short History of Medicine in China	19
Medical Pluralism and the Contemporary Situation of Chinese Medicine in China	29
Excursion: Ethnology and Emotions	36
2. Research Questions and Methodology	45
3. Emotions and Health in Classical Chinese Texts	53
4. Overview of Emotions and Health in Modern Medical Textbooks	73
5. Somatization – ‘Eastern Culture-bound Syndrome’ or ‘Western Culture- bound Perspective’?	81
6. Empirical Results	87
Beijing Inhabitant’s Familiarity with Chinese Medical Concepts and the Evaluation of Chinese Medicine	122
The Pathological Potential of Emotions	124
Group-specific perception of illnesses caused by emotions	127
Utilization of Chinese medicine	130
The Experts’ Interviews	132
7. Specific Answering Patterns	149
Age-specific Peculiarities: Changing Habitus and Different Modes of Power	149

Education-specific Peculiarities: Stress, Depression and the Chinese Education System	163
Gender-specific Peculiarities: 'Superior Births' and 'Superior Mothers'	168
8. Conclusion: Chinese Medicine Between Change and Persistence	175
9. Appendices	183
Appendix 1: Questionnaire	183
Appendix 2: Statistical Data of the Survey	187
Appendix 3: Information on Medical Experts and Medical Institutions.....	188
10. References	191