

Table of contents

Colette Moore and Don Chapman

Introduction — 1

I Particularizing and generalizing for written records

R. D. Fulk

A philological tour of HEL — 11

Donka Minkova

From stop-fricative clusters to contour segments in Old English — 29

Stefan Dollinger

On the regrettable dichotomy between philology and linguistics:

Historical lexicography and historical linguistics as test cases — 61

II Particulars of authorship

Seth Lerer

The history of the English language and the history of English literature — 93

Xingzhong Li

“Of harmes two, the lesse is for to chese”: An integrated OT-Maxent approach to syntactic inversions in Chaucer’s verse — 107

Mark Davies and Don Chapman

The effect of representativeness and size in historical corpora: An empirical study of changes in lexical frequency — 131

III Particulars of communicative setting

Peter J. Grund

Seeing is believing: Evidentiality and direct visual perception verbs in Early Modern English witness depositions — 153

Susan Fitzmaurice

Sincerity and the moral reanalysis of politeness in Late Modern English:
Semantic change and contingent polysemy — 173

Marina Dossena

Something to write home about: Social-network maintenance in the correspondence of nineteenth-century Scottish emigrants — 203

IV Particularizing from words

Betty S. Phillips

Words swimming in sound change — 225

John G. Newman

Plural marking in the Old and Middle English -nd stems feond
and freond — 239

Lynn D. Sims

From Shakespeare to Present-Day American English: The survival of 'get + (XP) + gone' constructions — 263

Index — 283