

Contents

Acknowledgements — VII

Abbreviations — IX

1 Introduction — 1

- 1.1 Types of cosmopolitanisms — 4
- 1.2 The new Kant — 5
- 1.3 Was Kant really a cosmopolitan? — 10
- 1.4 Kant's embedded and dynamic cosmopolitanism — 13
- 1.5 Outline of the book — 15

2 Cosmopolitanisms in Kant's philosophy — 21

- 2.1 Cosmopolitanisms according to Kant — 23
- 2.2 The concept of the highest good: immanent or transcendent? — 30
- 2.3 Kant's philosophy of history: The manipulation, education or self-education of humankind? — 40
- 2.4 The ethical commonwealth:
the duty of the human race towards itself — 44

3 Kant's right of world citizens: a historical interpretation — 49

- 3.1 Kant's commercial cosmopolitanism — 51
- 3.2 The historical context I: international legal theory — 55
- 3.3 The historical context II: the spirit of commerce, the four-stage theory, doux commerce, global integration, and mutual self-interest — 64

4 Educating Émile: Rousseau on embedded cosmopolitanism — 76

- 4.1 Rousseau's attack on forms of cosmopolitanism — 77
- 4.2 Rousseau's tentative republican cosmopolitanism — 78
- 4.3 Rousseau's vision of cosmopolitan education — 81
- 4.4 The limitations of Rousseau's approach — 87

5 Sources of Kant's cosmopolitanism: Basedow, Rousseau, and cosmopolitan education — 92

- 5.1 Johann Bernhard Basedow: a cosmopolitan-minded educational reformer — 94
- 5.2 Kant's assessment of Basedow's educational theory — 97

|     |                                                                                                                     |            |
|-----|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 5.3 | Rousseau: The split between cosmopolitan homme and patriotic citoyen —                                | 102        |
| 5.4 | Reinterpreting Rousseau: dynamic moral cosmopolitanism —                                                            | 105        |
| 6   | Taking a detour: Kant's theory of moral cosmopolitan formation —                                             | 117 |
| 6.1 | An outline of moral education according to Kant —                                                                   | 119        |
| 6.2 | Education following Kantian principles as cosmopolitan formation —                                                  | 124        |
| 7   | Res publica: Kant on cosmopolitical formation —                                                              | 133 |
| 7.1 | The republican tradition and the Kantian republic —                                                                 | 134        |
| 7.2 | Cosmopolitical education according to Kant —                                                                        | 136        |
| 7.3 | Kant's vision of progress in a genuine republic —                                                                   | 140        |
| 8   | Conclusion: From Kant to the present —                                                                       | 147 |
| 8.1 | From cosmopolitanism to nation states in German philosophy: Schiller, Novalis, Fichte, Hegel, Herbart (1795–1835) — | 147        |
| 8.2 | Kant's cosmopolitanism as a historical phenomenon: metaphysics, history, contingency —                              | 161        |
| 8.3 | Kant's legacy and the new cosmopolitanism —                                                                         | 165        |
| 8.4 | Kant's didactics, contemporary discourses, and cultural developments —                                              | 174        |
|     | Bibliography —                                                                                               | 181 |
|     | Subject index —                                                                                              | 207 |
|     | Index of names —                                                                                             | 214 |