

Contents

|          |                                                                                               |           |
|----------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------|
| 1 | The Importance of Sustainability in Corporate Strategy . . . . .                       | 1  |
| 2 | Why Are Corporate Ambition and Culture Vitalfor Sustainability? . . . . .         | 3  |
| 2.1      | An Agenda . . . . .                                                                           | 5         |
| 2.2      | A Compass in a Tornado . . . . .                                                              | 6         |
| 2.3      | A Filter for Selecting Development Paths . . . . .                                            | 7         |
| 2.4      | A Unifying Cement . . . . .                                                                   | 7         |
| 2.5      | A Strategic Ambition Needs to be Completed withan Outstanding Corporate Culture . . . . . | 8         |
| 3 | Treasuring Selected Customers: The Secret for Sustainability? . . .                    | 11 |
| 3.1      | The Importance of Customers . . . . .                                                         | 11        |
| 3.2      | The Principle of Deep and Constant Understanding . . . . .                                    | 12        |
| 3.3      | Needs and Wants . . . . .                                                                     | 14        |
| 3.4      | The Principle of Market Focalization . . . . .                                                | 15        |
| 3.5      | The Choice of Profitable Customers . . . . .                                                  | 16        |
| 3.6      | Offering More Than the Benefit: The Total Value Equation . . . .                              | 18        |
| 3.7      | Benefit, the Central Core of Value for Customers . . . . .                                    | 19        |
| 3.8      | Nurturing Customers' Loyalty . . . . .                                                        | 21        |
| 3.9      | Communicate with the Customer . . . . .                                                       | 21        |
| 4 | How Do Enduring Firms Outlive the Environment and theCompetition? . . . . .       | 25 |
| 4.1      | Political and Legal Environment . . . . .                                                     | 25        |
| 4.2      | Economic Environment . . . . .                                                                | 26        |
| 4.3      | Socio-cultural Situation . . . . .                                                            | 27        |
| 4.4      | Technological Environment . . . . .                                                           | 27        |
| 4.5      | Ecological Constraints . . . . .                                                              | 28        |
| 4.6      | The Ethical Imperative . . . . .                                                              | 28        |
| 4.7      | The Principle of Permanent Monitoring . . . . .                                               | 29        |
| 4.8      | A Definition of Competition . . . . .                                                         | 30        |
| 4.9      | Identification of Competitors . . . . .                                                       | 31        |

|          |                                                                                        |           |
|----------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------|
| 4.10     | Competitive Asymmetry and Doppler Effect in Competitive Identification . . . . .       | 32        |
| 4.11     | How Do Sustainable Firms Outlive the Competition? . . . . .                            | 33        |
| 5 | Why Sustainable Firms Have a Superior Management of Capabilities? . . . . .     | 37 |
| 5.1      | Resources . . . . .                                                                    | 37        |
| 5.2      | Skills . . . . .                                                                       | 39        |
| 5.3      | Identifying Capabilities . . . . .                                                     | 39        |
| 5.4      | Utilization of Various Capabilities Available . . . . .                                | 40        |
| 5.5      | The Main Principles of Resource Management: Threshold, Exclusivity, and Mass . . . . . | 41        |
| 5.6      | Managing Skills . . . . .                                                              | 42        |
| 5.7      | The Principle of Alignment . . . . .                                                   | 42        |
| 5.8      | The Principle of Capabilities Rationing . . . . .                                      | 43        |
| 5.9      | The Principle of Valorization . . . . .                                                | 44        |
| 5.10     | The Principle of Constant Flexibility . . . . .                                        | 45        |
| 5.11     | The Principle of Singularity . . . . .                                                 | 46        |
| 5.12     | Capabilities Development . . . . .                                                     | 46        |
| 6 | Selecting the Right Organization and Structure for Sustainability . . . . .     | 49 |
| 6.1      | Functional Structure . . . . .                                                         | 50        |
| 6.2      | Divisional Structure . . . . .                                                         | 51        |
| 6.3      | Holding Company Structure . . . . .                                                    | 52        |
| 6.4      | Matrix Structure . . . . .                                                             | 53        |
| 6.5      | The International Organization: A Non-issue . . . . .                                  | 54        |
| 6.6      | Multidisciplinary Teams . . . . .                                                      | 54        |
| 7 | Learning from the Operational Practices of Sustainable Companies . . . . .      | 57 |
| 7.1      | Disciplined Autonomy in Decision Making . . . . .                                      | 57        |
| 7.2      | The Principle of Efficient Simplicity . . . . .                                        | 58        |
| 7.3      | Wise Outsourcing of Operations . . . . .                                               | 60        |
| 7.4      | Hierarchical Frugality . . . . .                                                       | 60        |
| 7.5      | The Practice of Continuous Learning . . . . .                                          | 61        |
| 7.6      | Accountable Control System . . . . .                                                   | 62        |
| 8 | Innovation: The Central Way to Achieve Corporate Sustainability . . . . .       | 65 |
| 8.1      | Different Categories of Technological Innovation . . . . .                             | 66        |
| 8.2      | Different Types of Organizational Change . . . . .                                     | 67        |
| 8.3      | The Reasons Behind Technological Change . . . . .                                      | 68        |
| 8.4      | The Origin of Organizational Change . . . . .                                          | 69        |
| 8.5      | Preparing for Change . . . . .                                                         | 70        |
| 8.6      | Necessary Changes: Degree and Interest . . . . .                                       | 71        |
| 8.7      | Change and Available Resources . . . . .                                               | 72        |
| 8.8      | Capabilities that Must Be Preserved . . . . .                                          | 72        |

|           |                                                                                  |            |
|-----------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 8.9       | Timeframe for Change . . . . .                                                   | 73         |
| 8.10      | Employees' Motivation to Change . . . . .                                        | 73         |
| 8.11      | The Leaders' Ability to Lead Change . . . . .                                    | 74         |
| 8.12      | The Credibility of Leaders . . . . .                                             | 74         |
| 8.13      | Support from External Consultants . . . . .                                      | 76         |
| 9  | Managing Change and Transformation for Corporate Sustainability . . . . . | 77  |
| 9.1       | Implementation of Technological Changes . . . . .                                | 77         |
| 9.2       | Development of Technical Innovation . . . . .                                    | 80         |
| 9.3       | Implementation of Organizational Changes . . . . .                               | 81         |
| 9.4       | The Principle of Systematic Experimentation . . . . .                            | 82         |
| 9.5       | Controlling the Operational Timetable . . . . .                                  | 83         |
| 9.6       | The Appropriate Maneuvering Style . . . . .                                      | 84         |
| 9.7       | A Clear, Appropriate, and Reassuring Communication . . . . .                     | 85         |
| 9.8       | Political Agility . . . . .                                                      | 86         |
| 9.9       | Tenacity in Fulfilling the Change . . . . .                                      | 86         |
| 9.10      | Responsibility . . . . .                                                         | 87         |
| 9.11      | Change in Times of Crisis . . . . .                                              | 88         |
| 10 | Growth Strategy for Corporate Sustainability . . . . .                    | 91  |
| 10.1      | The Causes of Growth . . . . .                                                   | 91         |
| 10.2      | Increasing the Number of Clients . . . . .                                       | 92         |
| 10.3      | Increasing Attractiveness . . . . .                                              | 93         |
| 10.4      | Exploiting an Excess of Resources . . . . .                                      | 94         |
| 10.5      | Achieving the Economies of Scale and Scope . . . . .                             | 94         |
| 10.6      | Dealing with Risks Within the Environment . . . . .                              | 95         |
| 10.7      | Responding to Shareholders' and Managers' Desires . . . . .                      | 96         |
| 10.8      | The Routes to Growth . . . . .                                                   | 96         |
| 10.9      | Specialization . . . . .                                                         | 97         |
| 10.10     | Vertical Integration of Capabilities in Existing Businesses . . . . .            | 98         |
| 10.11     | Leveraging of Existing Capabilities Across New Businesses . . . . .              | 98         |
| 10.12     | Total Diversification . . . . .                                                  | 99         |
| 10.13     | Diversification: The Case of Internationalization . . . . .                      | 100        |
| 10.14     | External Growth . . . . .                                                        | 101        |
| 10.15     | The Limits to Growth . . . . .                                                   | 102        |
| 11 | The Value of Great Execution and Humility for Sustainability . . . . .    | 105 |
| 11.1      | Quality of Operations . . . . .                                                  | 105        |
| 11.2      | From Success to Failure . . . . .                                                | 106        |
| 11.3      | Sustainable Companies Avoid Being Blindedby Present Triumphs . . . . .       | 108        |
| 11.4      | Accepting Decision Sharing . . . . .                                             | 109        |
| 11.5      | Organizing the Succession . . . . .                                              | 110        |
| 12 | Conclusion: Timeless Principles of Corporate Sustainability . . . . .     | 113 |