

Pause – A Somewhat Different Table of Contents

As much warm-up and background as necessary...

AAAAHHRG!!! An owl, or drawing as a personal failure	6–7
Pause – a somewhat different table of contents.	8–9
Ummm... drawing? A definition and what this book is supposed to do	10–11
Common concerns and legitimate questions.	12–13
Foreword	14–15
This book is useful for.....	16–17
Learning by doing? Yes and no. Pole vault and a dinosaur in the commuter train	18–19
Materials? Keep it simple	20–21
A surprising view on getting started with sketching	22–23
A sundae with potatoes and an insight from Einstein.	24–25
The thing about talent, ego, and high expectations.	26–29
Say the colour, not the word	30–31
One brain, two operating systems – huh?	32–33
Surprise – we see with the brain, not the eyes.	34–35
Learning to draw and see step-by-step, rather than ‘giving it a go to see if you’re good at it’	36–37
Five ‘chunks’ of a sought-after skill	38–39
On coffee stirrers and invisible drawings.	40–41
Redcurrants and veal sausages	42–43
That’s no way to speak to yourself! On self-talk while drawing.	44–45

... as much doing and as many things to look at as possible

Exercises for getting started – suspiciously easy.	46–47
The first ‘colouring book’ for lateral thinkers?	48–49
And a very different basic training.	50–51
Maybe you should turn what you think you know about drawing on its head.	52–53
On the uses of white triangles that don’t exist	54–55
The ‘soft’ artist’s eye and seeing the whole – practicing with doable examples	56–57
Drawing in slow motion – the fastest way to the eye-pen connection.	58–59
Experiencing lively lines – the example of your hand	60–61
Drawing directly on the picture plane – a very different experience	62–63
A way to trick yourself into overcoming symbolic preconceptions ...	64–65
Your eye awakens – from crumb to roll and ever onward.	66–67
Discovering the liberating effect of ‘captive’ shapes – beginning with photos	68–69
And then with real subjects	70–71
Beginning a drawing very differently – basic units instead of pure luck.	72–73
Recently at the motorway exit	74–75
Learning to see more clearly with the magic wand	76–77
How am I doing? A checklist for outwitting your inner bastard.	78–79
Enjoying success – a view in black and white and colour.	80–81
On posts, rabbits, and seeing-thinking.	82–83
The 3-minute experiment. Are you looking yet, or still thinking?	84–85
Begin carefully, please.	86–87
Summer 2015 – drawings.	88–91

Practical tips for accurate sketching	92–95	Two completely different drawings.....	160–161
Our wondrous brain and its way of learning	96–97	The hotel breakfast – four different ways of seeing.....	162–169
The secret of light, dark, and everything in between.....	98–99	On comfort zones, van Gogh, and little successes	170–171
Learn easier with a graphite primer.....	100–101	The Zen of drawing?.....	172–173
Making your hand more visible	102–103	The open secret of drawing and happy-dancing	174–175
Magic with a graphite primer – more possibilities.....	104–105	Obsession is an ornament, you can't do without it	176–177
Bringing out black stones, bringing out white stones	106–107	Everything's a good subject – when seeing-thinking sets in	178–179
Bringing out even more things	108–109	Summer sketches 2016	180–195
On incremental adjustment and in-depth learning	110–111	Tests of courage in the public pool	196–197
Sometimes knowledge doesn't help – bamboo roots and bones	112–113	The call of colour – all in due time	198–201
Perspective drawing from a 13-year-old and my first landscape.....	114–115	Book recommendations, contacts in the USA and Europe, sources for learning materials.....	202–203
Seeing faces very differently – and how knowledge helps perception	116–117	Five days and their consequences	204–205
Faces are also landscapes – profile portrait studies.....	118–119	Epilogue.....	206–207
Hatching – with pencil, fineliner, pen & ink	120–121	Copyright page.....	208
Drawing extremely slowly, drawing extremely quickly	122–123
Notes from my introductory phase in 2012	124–127
Looking at drawings differently and more closely	128–129
Back to Corsica and accurate sketching	130–131
My experience: amazement is more helpful than belief in your own talent.....	132–133
Outside – the wider view	134–135
Opening your eyes with an apple.....	136–137
How to keep your drawing from going pear-shaped	138–141
A pencil looks around – more drawings.....	142–149
A short side note on drawing stress.....	150–151
Back from the island.....	152–155
Everyday life and drawing.....	156–157
The chapel on the hill and the fog on the paper	158–159		