

Contents

Introduction — 1

1 Johann Gottfried Herder – the “Inventor of Zeitgeist”? — 8

- 1.1 Herder’s work as a site of convergence — 8
- 1.2 The genealogy of zeitgeist – Barclay and Bacon — 21
- 1.3 Praising or critiquing the age – Genius Saeculi and the Querelle — 25

2 The Making of Zeitgeist – Culture and Public Spirit between Enfranchisement and Control — 27

- 2.1 Geist, l’esprit, spirit – public spirit and collective identity — 27
- 2.2 Montesquieu’s L’esprit des loix – collective spirit against despotism — 31
- 2.3 Blackwell’s Enquiry – communal spirit and cultural context — 35
- 2.4 Culture – conflating collective identity, the spirit of the times, and cultural history in Bodmer, Hurd, Mallet, and Percy — 38

3 The Public and Zeitgeist – Public Spirit and Public Opinion 1790–1800 — 50

- 3.1 Zeitgeist, public spirit, and public opinion — 50
- 3.2 The political role of public opinion in Britain and Germany – the guardian of lawful government and the risks of demagoguery — 56
- 3.3 The uses of public opinion – Georg Forster and Christian Garve — 64
- 3.4 The battle over public opinion in 1790s Britain — 73
- 3.5 Zeitgeist, public opinion, and the masses – manipulation or the public will — 81

4 Zeitgeist in Germany – Public Opinion, History, and the People in Franz Josias von Hendrich, Ernst Brandes, and Ernst Moritz Arndt — 85

- 4.1 Restoring the public good – similarities between Thelwall and Arndt — 85
- 4.2 Hendrich and Brandes – zeitgeist and historical conditions — 87

- 4.3 Arndt – zeitgeist and the role of intellectual elites — 105
- 4.4 Zeitgeist – public opinion and history — 126
- 5 Zeitgeist in Britain – The Spirit of the Age and Social Reform in Julius Hare, William Hazlitt, Thomas Carlyle, and J. S. Mill — 129
 - 5.1 Arndt's Geist der Zeit in Britain — 131
 - 5.2 Reform politics and zeitgeist in England – the rise of a new elite — 141
 - 5.3 Julius Hare – public politics and Arndt's Geist der Zeit — 144
 - 5.4 William Hazlitt – “paradoxical” German literature and the spirit of the age — 166
 - 5.5 Thomas Carlyle – the “Age of Mechanism” and the French Revolution — 190
 - 5.6 John Stuart Mill – the “Spirit of the Age” and the “Age of Transition” — 219
 - 5.7 Zeitgeist in Britain – politics and public opinion — 230
- 6 How Ideas Travel (in Theory): The Zeitgeist Dynamic — 234
- 7 How an Idea Travels (in Practice) – A Case Study: The Germanic and the Gothic – The Life and Times of the “Northern” Identity of Liberty and Duty in Germany and Britain 1770–1870 — 243
 - 7.1 The emergence of the terms Germanic and Gothic — 246
 - 7.2 The “Germanic-Gothic” identity project 1770–1830 – a social and cultural challenge — 251
 - 7.3 National self-determination and social emancipation – the Germanic Europe, chivalry, and constitutionalism — 257
 - 7.4 Paths to institutionalisation in Britain and Germany – Germanistik, the Christian gentleman, and the Gothic Revival — 271
 - 7.4.1 Germanistik – traditions of liberty in laws and poetry — 271
 - 7.4.2 The Christian gentleman and English liberty – Kenelm Henry Digby's Broad Stone of Honour, J. M. Kemble's Saxons in England and the Germanist historians at Oxford and Cambridge — 277
 - 7.4.3 The Gothic Revival – the Palace of Westminster and Cologne Cathedral — 286

7.5	The “Germanic-Gothic” identity project and its cultural patterns – summary —	288
7.6	The propagators of the Germanic-Gothic identity – the profile of an “elite” —	294
7.6.1	The British “elites” —	296
7.6.2	The German “elites” —	306
7.6.3	Elites, ideas, and getting established —	322
7.7	How an idea travels (in practice) – conclusion —	324

Works Cited — 327

Index — 338