

Contents

Preface	7
1. Introduction	7
Part One: Theories of Learning: A Field of Approaches towards the Learning of Adults
2. Of Learning Triangles and Beyond	15
2.1 Introducing systematic approaches	15
2.2 Levels of energy	18
3. Relational Perspectives on Learning	23
3.1 Phenomenography	23
3.2 Relational didactics	27
4. Logical Models and Stages of Learning	31
4.1 The relationship between logic and learning	31
4.2 Bateson's levels of learning	32
4.3 Alternatives to Bateson's levels of learning	35
5. Comprehensive Approaches	39
5.1 Towards a comprehensive theory of learning?	39
5.2 Humanism and pragmatism: The roots and branches of modern learning theory?	45
6. Looking Beyond One's Own Nose: Psychological Approaches and Neurosciences	55
6.1 A brief glance at behaviourism, cognitivism, and constructivism	55
6.2 The learning brain?	59
6.3 Conclusions	62

Part Two: The ‘Art of Teaching’: Exploring Concepts of Adult Learning to Address Didactic Challenges

7.	Didactics and Didactic Models	69
7.1	Preliminaries on the term didactic	69
7.2	Didactic models and models of instruction	72
8.	Reflections on Learning	79
8.1	Learning and non-learning	79
8.2	Exercise: Reflection on learning	82
9.	Time, Person, Lifeworld: Cornerstones of Didactic Theory	91
9.1	Time: Sequences and gestalt of learning	91
9.2	Person: Emotion, cognition, and the lived body	95
9.3	Lifeworld: The social and material environment	105
10.	Conclusions	109
	Annotated Bibliography	115
	References	119
	About the Author	125
	Index	127