

Table of Contents

List of abbreviations	IX
Foreword & Acknowledgements	XI
About the transcription/transliteration of Ancient and Modern Greek	XIII
Introduction	1
A Modern Greek syntactic peculiarity	1
Research Objectives	2
Book's overview	4
Chapter 1: Égklisis Hypotaktikḗ: The Subjunctive in Ancient Greek	6
1.1. The term subjunctive in the AG grammatical tradition	6
1.2. The AG subjunctive mood in dependent clauses: purpose clauses	6
1.3. The AG subjunctive mood in dependent clauses: conditionality	10
1.4. The AG subjunctive mood in non-dependent clauses	12
1.5. Conclusion	17
Chapter 2: The Semantics of the Subjunctive Mood	19
2.1. The subjunctive as non-declarative: a cross-linguistic fact	19
2.2. Defining mood and modality	21
2.3. The semantic features assertion and realis	25
2.4. The MG subjunctive mood features: -assertion , -realis	32
2.5. Conclusion	34
Chapter 3: The Subjunctive within the Modern Greek Verbal System	35
3.1. Synthetic vs. analytical subjunctive mood	35
3.2. The Modern Greek verbal system	37
3.3. The +perfective /-past verbal form and the existence of a synthetic subjunctive mood in MG	43
3.4. The boundaries of morphological mood: Synthetic and analytical mood versus modality	46
3.5. The subjunctive mood in Ancient and in Modern Greek	50
3.6. Two properties of the MG na -subjunctive	52
3.7. An outline of the semantics of the MG verbal categories	55
3.8. Conclusion	61
Chapter 4: The Modern Greek Subjunctive Complementation	63
4.1. The "Predicate Method of Diachronic Comparison" (PMDC)	63
4.2. Predicates selecting subjunctive complements	67
4.2.1. Predicates exclusively selecting subjunctive complements	68
4.2.2. Predicates not exclusively selecting subjunctive complements	77
4.3. The semantic affinity of diachronically distinct structures	92
4.4. A note on the participial complementation	95
4.5. Conclusion	96

Chapter 5: The loss of the Infinitival Complementation	97
5.1. Diglossia and linguistic purism as an obstacle for historical research	97
5.2. Language change and “antagonistic” syntactic structures	99
5.3. The demise of the non-finite complementation	101
5.4. The variety of registers in New Testament: an indication of an ongoing syntactic change	109
5.5. Conclusion	113
Chapter 6: Finite Complementation, Areal Affinities and Typological Similarities	115
6.1. Basic syntactic uniformity	115
6.2. Beyond basic syntactic uniformity: Variation phenomena	119
6.2.1. Infinitival / non-finite and finite complementation within one language system	119
6.2.2. Morphological subjunctive endings	125
6.2.3. Dissimilar Mood Negator	127
6.2.4. Conjunctions/ Complementizers	128
6.2.5. Aspect	132
6.2.6. Concluding remarks on the contrastive examination of the Balkansprachbund languages	135
6.2.7. The Southern Italian dialects	136
6.3. Cross-linguistic/non-areal phenomena of finite complementation	139
6.3.1. Romance inflected infinitives: the Portuguese “personal infinitive” (infinitivo pessoal)	139
6.3.2. The Hungarian inflected infinitive	142
6.3.3. Subjunctive complementation in Armenian and in Persian	144
6.4. Interim Conclusion	147
6.4.1. Finite complementation: a pro-drop language property?	147
6.4.2. The loss of inflected infinitives in Brazilian Portuguese and the pro-drop parameter	149
Chapter 7: The Syntax of the Modern Greek Subjunctive Complements	151
7.1. Sine qua non : what should not be ignored when dealing with the structure of the MG subjunctive complements	151
7.1.1. Theoretical framework	152
7.2. Some major approaches on the syntax of MG na -clauses	152
7.3. Some remarks on the syntactic structure of the MG clause	161
7.4. Sentential structure: dependency and control	168
7.4.1. Obligatory Control (OC) sentential structure	168
7.4.2. Object Control and non-controlled structures	172
7.5. Conclusion	161
Chapter 8 – Summary and concluding remarks	177
8.1. Summary of the principal conclusions	177
8.2. Theoretical consequences and further research desiderata	178
Bibliography	181
Index	189