

Contents

I.	Introduction: Dystopia Today	11
II.	The Dystopian Genre	23
1.	Genre, Etymology, and Definition of Utopian, Eutopian, and Dystopian Fiction	23
2.	The History of Dystopian Fiction	30
3.	Context, Criticism, and Rahel Jaeggi's Critique of Forms of Life (2014)	38
3.1.	Classical Dystopian Fiction, State Totalitarianism, and 'External Criticism'	47
3.2.	Contemporary Dystopian Fiction, Neoliberal Capitalism, and 'Immanent Criticism'	55
III.	'Crowd-Founded' Dystopia: Dave Eggers' The Circle (2013)	79
1.	Corporate Dystopia – The Rise of the Circle	82
2.	"Don't You See That It's All Connected?" – The Company and Network Standards	90
3.	Network Standards – The Circlers' Loss of Identity and Longing for Recognition	101
4.	"They Have Offered No Alternative" – The 'Eutopian' Monopoly of the Circle	112
IV.	The Totalitarian Face of Neoliberalism: Margaret Atwood's The Heart Goes Last (2015)	121
1.	"Jobs for All!" – The Eutopian Facade of Neoliberalism	125
2.	"The Right Choice(!)" – Involuntary Decisions Within Neoliberal Networks	135
3.	The Banality of Dystopia – Totalitarianism as Product of the Free Market	146
4.	"I Need to Help Fix This " – The Impossibility of Thinking beyond Neoliberal Capitalism	154

V.	Feeding Neoliberal Capitalism: M. T. Anderson's Feed (2002)	161
1.	Conceptionariums and Air Factories – The Commodification of Life and Nature	165
2.	“I Did Not Get the Job” – Network Standards, Neoliberal Capitalism, and the Feed	175
3.	Trendy Riot Gear & Evil Corporations – The Absence of Resistance	183
4.	“Hope Was Looking off to the Side” – The Inefficiency of ‘External Criticism’	189
VI.	Predatory Capitalism Throughout History: David Mitchell's Cloud Atlas (2004)	203
1.	From Empire to Corpocracy – The History of Capitalism	209
2.	“Free Will Plays No Part in My Story” – Networks and Path Dependence	224
3.	A “Cannibals’ Banqueting Hall” – Consumption and Its (Narratological) Limits	234
4.	“Hydra” versus “A Multitude of Drops” – ‘Immanent Criticism’ as Compass for Reform	243
VII.	Clones and Free-Market Capitalism: Kazuo Ishiguro's Never Let Me Go (2005)	257
1.	Our “Most Marketable Stuff” – The Commodification of Life, Art, and Sex	259
2.	“Tommy Had Brought All His Problems on Himself” – Individuals Within Networks	271
3.	The Logic Behind Rebellion – The Confusion of Voluntariness and Freedom	281
4.	“That Frightened People” – The Failure of ‘External Criticism’	291
VIII.	Dystopia, ‘Immanent Criticism,’ and its Eutopian Implications	299
IX.	Bibliography	313