

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	XI
Introduction	XIII
Chapter 1. Statelessness, Flight, and Trauma	1
1.1 Making Decisions in 1944	2
1.2 The “Year of Terror”: The First Soviet Occupation 1940-41	6
1.3 Dashed Hopes: The German Occupation, 1941-1945	15
1.4 Restoring the Past	21
1.5 Leaving and Staying	31
1.6 Departure: Summer 1944 to Spring 1945	40
1.7 The Swedish Option	46
1.8 The Reception in Sweden and Germany	49
1.9 Separation and Emotion	56
Chapter 2. Refugees and Displaced Persons	65
2.1 The Unmooring of Identity	66
2.2 Camps: Transit, Refugee, and POW	72
2.3 The Swedish Exception	80
2.4 The Latvian DPs in Germany	87
2.5 The Dilemmas of Leadership	95
2.6 The Economics of Refugee Life	101
2.7 ‘Civil Society’ in the Camps	107
2.8 The “Creative” Intelligentsia	116
2.9 The Emerging Exile Culture	125
Chapter 3. Old Continent, New Homelands	135
3.1 Exiting from the Camps	135
3.2 Remaining European	140
3.3 German-Speaking Europe	145
3.4 Sweden, Norway, and Finland	154
3.5 United Kingdom	161
3.6 France, the Low Countries, and Denmark	166
3.7 Elsewhere in Europe	170
3.8 A Non-Territorial European Nation	173
3.9 Perpetuating Separateness	185
3.10 The Old Homeland Beckons and Condemns	192

Chapter 4. New Homelands on New Continents	199
4.1 Leaving Europe	200
4.2 North America: the United States	207
4.3 North America: Canada	222
4.4 Australia and New Zealand	230
4.5 South America	234
4.6 Dispersal and National Identity	238
4.7 Coping with Marginality	246
Chapter 5. Resettlement Years: The 1950s	255
5.1 The DP Camp Heritage	256
5.2 The Enigma of Assimilation	262
5.3 The Organizational Impulse	272
5.4 Safeguarding the Latvian Language	281
5.5 The Latvian Family and Latvian Home	287
5.6 Grade Schools and Higher Education	294
5.7 The Belletrists	303
5.8 The Periodical Press	315
5.9 Worship and Cultural Uniqueness	323
5.10 Resettlement and Collective Identity	330
Chapter 6. Varieties of Absorption	340
6.1 Standing Apart	342
6.2 Detecting Danger Signals	349
6.3 Vulnerable Adults	359
6.4 Growing Self-Confidence: Young Adults	366
6.5 Patrimony in Transition: Children and Youth	374
6.6 Workplaces and Education	384
6.7 Materialism and Rootedness	392
6.8 External Turbulence and Internal Differentiation	398
6.9 The Fundamentals of Belonging	406
6.10 Manifesting a Presence	418
Chapter 7. Diversity, Disagreement, and the Old Homeland Nexus	434
7.1 Information Flows after 1945	437
7.2 Propaganda, Letters, and Packages	445
7.3 Official and Unofficial Visits	451
7.4 Contacts and Division	459
7.5 The Trimda Grows Opaque	468

7.6 The Restive Young: Individualism and Latvianness 477

7.7 Those Insubordinate Intellectuals 484

7.8 Biculturalism as Normality 497

7.9 Latvianness Reconfigured 507

Chapter 8. The Iron Curtain Disintegrates 517

8.1 A Fragile Equilibrium 519

8.2 A ‘Fragmented Reality’ 528

8.3 A Polymorphic Exile 538

8.4 Changing Perceptions 550

8.5 A Ragged Interface 560

8.6 Returning and Belonging 571

Chapter 9. The Making of a Diaspora 587

9.1 A Quieter Voice 590

9.2 The New Emigration from Latvia 599

9.3 National Outreach 610

9.4 The ‘Old Trimda’ within the Diaspora 623

9.5 The ‘New Emigration’ Within the Diaspora 644

9.6 The Latvian Diaspora: Composition and Organization 657

9.7 The Functions of the Diaspora Concept 670

References 682

Index 714