

Foreword	9
Note to the reader	11
Introduction	13
0.1 Preliminaries: A bird's eye view	13
0.2 A roadmap	21
0.2.1 Scope of the present investigation: What is not found in this book	22
0.2.2 Contents: What is found in this book	24
Chapter 1. Self-motion in de Anima I 3–4: Aristotle vis-à-vis Plato	31
1.1 Dialectic and diaporetic method in de An. I 2–5: Three plausibility constraints	31
1.2 de An. I 3–4: Two concerns	45
a) Concern 1: The definition of soul as self-motion	45
b) Concern 2: Soul as a first mover	45
1.3 The argument in de An. I 3–4	47
1.3.1 Overall strategy of refutation	47
1.3.2 Plato's self-moving souls	60
1.3.3 Aristotle's refutation of the claim that soul is moved per se : A detailed outline	73
1.3.3.1 Aristotle's concerns about causal synonymy: T8.(i)	75
1.3.3.2 The distinction between motion καθ' αὐτό and καθ' ἑτερον: T8.(ii)	85
1.3.3.3 The per se motions of soul are neither natural nor violent: Arguments (1)–(5)	91
1.3.3.4 The ekstasis argument and Plato's definition of soul	110
1.4 A positive lesson on the soul-body causal relation	119
1.5 Timean "perceptions" as sui generis per se motions of soul	125
1.6 Summary	142

Chapter 2. Ph. VIII 1–6: Self-motion and its necessary conditions	147
2.1 An overview	147
2.2 Self-movers as a threat to the eternity of motion (Ph. VIII 1–2)	151
2.2.1 The argument for the eternity of motion a parte ante (Ph. VIII 1)	151
2.2.1.1 Aristotle's proof	151
2.2.1.2 The eternity claim: Two readings	175
2.2.2 The aporia about self-motion and its relevance for the argument in Ph. VIII	182
2.2.2.1 Brief aperçu on Aristotle's argument in Ph. VIII 3–6	182
2.2.2.2 The third aporia in Ph. VIII 2	188
2.2.2.3 Aristotle's interim solution to the third aporia	199
2.3 The relation between Ph. VIII 2 and Ph. VIII 6	228
2.4 Ph. VIII 6: Self-motion vs. the first eternal motion	231
2.4.1 The argument in context	232
2.4.2 My reading of Ph. VIII 6, 259b1–260a19	239
2.4.2.1 From weak causal autonomy to the inability to cause continuous motion in two steps (Ph. VIII 6, 259b1–31)	239
2.4.2.2 The conclusion of the overarching argument in Ph. VIII 3–6 (Ph. VIII 6, 259b32–260a19)	264
2.4.3 The οὐ κυρίως claim: Alternative readings of Ph. VIII 6, 259b1–20	268
2.4.3.1 Meaning of the οὐ κυρίως claim	268
2.4.3.2 Justification of the οὐ κυρίως claim	272
2.4.4 Some loose ends: Metaphysical aspects of strong causal autonomy	274
Chapter 3. de An. III 9–10 and MA: Animal self-motion as voluntary (desire-based) locomotion	281
3.1 An overview	281
3.2 A methodological prolegomenon : Plato, Aristotle, and two senses of capacity	291
3.3 The initial question about the mover: A brief outline of the argument in de An. III 9	303
3.3.1 Individuation without Separation: Two distinct concerns	324
3.3.2 Separation and unity of desire: Plato's egregious mistake and two distinct unity issues	331

3.3.2.1	The argument in de An. III 9, 432a22–b13	331
3.3.2.2	A rival interpretation of de An. III 9–10	347
3.4	de Anima III 10: Definitional distinctness, formal unity and conflict of desire(s)	355
3.4.1	de An. III 10, 433a9–21: Occurrent desires and extensional distinctness	355
3.4.2	de An. III 10, 433a21–30: Erring desires and the ὀρεκτόν as a mover	365
3.4.3	de An. III 10, 433b5–13: Conflict of (occurrent) desires and the formal unity of the capacity for desire	376
3.4.4	de An. III 10, 433b13–30: Locomotive capacity defined and a coda	388
3.5.	Self-motion at the crossroads of de Anima III 9–10 and Ph. VIII: The daunting task of MA	403
	Conclusion	415
4.1	Summary of the main results	415
4.1.1	Chapter 1	415
4.1.2	Chapter 2	417
4.1.3	Chapter 3	423
4.2	Ph. VIII 5: Self-motion and the unity of life	425
	References	433
	Index locorum	443
	Index of names	455
	Index of subjects	457