

Contents

Anna Kollatz

Introduction: On to New Horizons—Tackling the Mamluks’

Descendants . . . . . 7

Part I

Jo Van Steenbergen

Where are the Awlād al-Nās? Arabic Historiography, *Mamlūk*ization, and the Semantics and Discursive Politics of a Polysemous Concept . . . 25

Stephan Conermann

Mamluk Descendants in Military Service: The Ḥalqa . . . . . 97

Mustafa Banister

“Sulṭān Awlād al-Nās” or “Amīr ibn Mamlūk”? Re-framing Khalīl ibn
Shāhīn’s Zubdat Kashf al-Mamālik wa-Bayān al-Ṭuruq wa-l-Masālik . . . 121

Noha Abou-Khatwa

The Muḥsinī Brothers: A Case Study in the Contribution of Mamluks’
Descendants to Cairo’s Material Culture in the Fourteenth Century . . . . 141

Daisuke Igarashi

‘Who should benefit from my Waqf?’ Mamluks’ Views on Progeny,
Lineage, and Family based on their Waqf Stipulations . . . . . 173

Takao Ito

Awlād al-Nās during and after the Reign of al-Nāṣir Ḥasan . . . . . 195

|                                                                                            |     |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Yehoshua Frenkel                                                                           |     |
| Awlād al-Nās in Mamlūk Jerusalem: An Inquiry into several Ḥaram documents . . . . . | 217 |

Part II

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Koby Yosef                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |     |
| The Rise of Mamlūks ' Descendants in the Turkish Period (648–784/1250–1382): The Status and Identity of Mamlūks ' Descendants who were Amirs in Cairo according to the Jarīda Iqṭā'iyya of the Year 778/1377 . . . | 237 |
| Koby Yosef                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |     |
| The Term Awlād al-Nās and “the Rise of a New Class” . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                    | 431 |
| Biographies . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                   | 611 |