

Table of Contents

1. Introduction	7
1.1. A Private Passion – Bacon's Attitude towards Photography	16
1.2. State of Research	26
1.3. Luck and Chance – Painting 1946 as a Case Study	32
1.4. The Iceberg – Research Material and Definition of 'Photographic Reference'	44
2. The Studio – Analysis of the Working Environment	48
2.1. 'A Little Corner of South Kensington'	48
2.2. 'Cat in a Cage' – Francis Bacon in Reece Mews	68
2.3. 'A Heap of Broken Images' – Preparatory Processes	85
2.4. Drawing a Line – Drawings versus Photographs	127
3. Comparative Analyses – Bacon's Paintings and their Photographic References	139
3.1. Spatial Setting and Photography	139
3.1.1. Spatial Settings – Abstract, Elusive, Unreliable	140
3.1.2. The Stage Set – Figure and Ground	157
3.2. Figure and Photography	172
3.2.1. 'Collage is not my medium' – The Construction of the Figure	172
3.2.2. Figure, Outline, Materiality – Closest to and Furthest Away from the Photograph	194
3.3. Narrative, Identity and the Use of Photographs	211
3.3.1. 'I don't want to tell a story, I have no story to tell'	213
3.3.2. Portrait and Identity – No Less than Life Itself	232
3.4. Colour and Photography – 'Colour is a most mysterious thing'	254

4.	Conclusion – ‘A Sponge that Absorbs Everything’	270
5.	Appendix	283
	Bibliography	285
	List of Pictorial References to Francis Bacon’s Paintings	308
	Acknowledgements	411
	Picture Credits	412
	Colour Plates	414
	Triptychs	444