

Contents

1	Introduction	1
1.1	Statement of Purpose	1
1.2	Methodology	2
1.3	Structure and Organization of the Manuscript	6
	References	7
2	Urban Green Provision and Constructions of Nation: Western and Eastern Policies	9
2.1	Why a Study on Singapore’s Planning and Design of Public Parks and Open Green Spaces	9
2.2	Singapore’s Circumstances	11
2.2.1	Physical Context	11
2.2.2	Political/Cultural Context	11
2.2.3	Political Agenda and the Development of the Physical Environment	12
2.3	The Evolution of the Concept of Park System and Constructions of Nation in the Western and Eastern Debate	13
2.4	Notions of Sustainability: The Role of Public Parks in Cities and the Progressive Organization of Parks and Urban Green Spaces into a Structured ‘System’ or ‘Infrastructure’	14
2.4.1	The Western Context	14
2.4.2	The Asian Context	16
2.5	Evolution of Constructions of Nation in the Built Environment	17
2.5.1	Parks and Urban Green Space Conceived as a Nation Building Tool: Singapore’s Post-Colonial Case Study	20
2.6	A Political Vision of Nature: Singapore’s Policy of Green Provision and the Making of the Garden City	25
	References	33

3	Colonial Planning and Design of Parks and Gardens in Singapore	37
3.1	Introduction	37
3.2	Overview of Western Policies Applied in Singapore's Context	38
3.2.1	Urban Form	38
3.2.2	Landscape Representation	38
3.2.3	The British Public Parks Movement	40
3.2.4	The Victorian Garden and the English Landscape Park	41
3.3	Urban Planning of Singapore Colonial Town	42
3.4	The British Vision of Urban Nature Displayed in Urban Design and Design of Public Space and Parks: the Raffles Plan (1822); Coleman Map (1829–1838) and the Thomson Plan (1843)	43
3.4.1	The Padang	45
3.4.2	The Promenade	47
3.4.3	The City Reservoir Parks	47
3.5	The Ancestors of Public Parks: Pleasure Gardens and Semi-Public Spaces—The Botanic Gardens, Haw Par Villa, Whampoa Gardens and Alkaff Gardens	48
3.5.1	The Alkaff Gardens	52
3.5.2	Whampoa Gardens	54
3.6	European Representations of Singapore's Landscape in the 1800s	56
3.7	Conclusions	59
	References	62
4	Singapore's British Integrated System of Public Open Spaces	65
4.1	Introduction	65
4.2	Overview of Western Policies Applied in Singapore's Context	66
4.2.1	The Role of Public Parks in Cities Since the 1800s	66
4.2.2	The British 'Garden City' Concept and the Green Belt	68
4.3	Singapore's Island-Wide Planning: The 1958 Master Plan	69
4.4	The Parks Proposed by the 1958 Master Plan	72
4.4.1	The Green Belt and Scenic Walk: An Infrastructure Devised to Contain Urban Growth and Provide Recreation	72
4.4.2	Parks Built Around Functional Infrastructures for Water Management	73
4.4.3	Nature Reserves Designated for the Study of Local Flora and Fauna, Nature Preservation and to Function as Public Parks	75

4.4.4	Scientific Research and Agricultural Experimentation: The Botanic Gardens in Singapore and the Network of Botanic Gardens in Southeast Asia	76
4.4.5	The Colonial Resort and Public Beach: Seaside Conceived as Recreation	77
4.4.6	Proposal to Convert Cemetery Spaces into Public Parks	77
4.4.7	The Politics of Private Open Spaces	79
4.4.8	Town Parks: Public Green Space Planned for Proposed New Towns	79
4.4.9	City Parks: Aesthetics, Identity and Recreation	80
4.5	Conclusions	82
	References	84
5	Parks for the Community: The City State's Modernist Planning Model	87
5.1	Introduction	87
5.2	Overview of Western Policies Applied in Singapore's Context	88
5.2.1	The British New Towns Movement	88
5.2.2	Modernist Ideology to Represent Nationhood	89
5.2.3	Landscape Representation	90
5.2.4	The Open Plan and the Definition of a Tropical Aesthetics	91
5.2.5	Singapore's Postmodern Critique	94
5.2.6	Propaganda, Marketing Strategies and Landscape Representation: The Modernist and Postmodern Attitude	95
5.3	Urban Planning at an Island-Wide Scale: The 1971 Concept Plan	96
5.4	Urban Planning of the New Town	102
5.5	The City State Modernist Stand	106
5.5.1	The Large-Scale East Coast Regional Park as Representation of Tropical Beach and Re- Engineered Coastline	107
5.5.2	Katong Park: Display of Social History	112
5.6	The City State Postmodern Stand	115
5.6.1	Modernist and Postmodern Marketing Strategies: Urban Design of the Historic City-Core	115
5.6.2	A Postmodern Tourism Marketing Strategy: The Merlion Park	117

5.6.3	Jurong Town: Crafting of a Unique Asian Identity with Design of Themed Chinese Public Parks; Representations of Tropicality; and Ecological Sustainability with Eco-Gardens	118
5.7	Conclusions	124
	References	127
6	From Character and Visual Identity to Theme—Gardens: Design of Parks and Public Open Space in Postmodern Singapore	131
6.1	Introduction	131
6.2	Overview of Western Policies Applied in Singapore's Context	133
6.2.1	The Definition of the 'Multicultural Theme': Tourism Marketing and Constructions of Nation	133
6.2.2	Set Design for 'Multicultural' Constructions of Nation: The New Towns and the Civic District	135
6.2.3	Postmodern Experimentations in Public Housing Estates	136
6.2.4	Place Making and Imageability in Design of New Towns and Parks	139
6.2.5	The Evolution of the Open Space System	140
6.2.6	Landscape Representation and the Post-Traditional Attitude. The Definition of Identity and the Building of the 'Imagined Community'	141
6.2.7	The Evolution of Tropical Aesthetics	144
6.3	Urban Planning at the Island-Wide Scale	145
6.4	Urban Planning at the New Town Scale	146
6.5	Singapore's New Towns: Urban Form, Visual Identity and Sense of Place	148
6.6	Contextualism, Tropicality, the Vernacular, and Place Making	151
6.7	The Use of Sculptures and Sculptural Spaces to Construct the History and Culture of Site: Creation of Cultural Symbols in Parks	155
6.7.1	Designing the Experience of Play in Woodlands New Town	159
6.8	Construction of Colonial and Vernacular Landscape Settings in Parks: the Re-Interpretation of the Vernacular Malay 'Kampong' and the Colonial Agricultural Past	162
6.8.1	Crafting of History and Locale in Yishun New Town	165

6.9	The Evolution of the Chinese Garden Style. Ethnicity and the Building of Identity with Chinese, Japanese and Cross-Cultural Parks	168
6.10	Conclusions	171
	References	176
7	Re-purposing and Thematizing Colonial Gardens: Constructions of History and Nation in Singapore's Heritage Parks	179
7.1	Introduction	179
7.2	Overview of Western Policies Applied in Singapore's Context	180
7.2.1	Tourism, 'Cultural' Heritage and the Building of a National Identity	180
7.2.2	The Nation Building 'Multicultural Theme' Applied to Urban Development at an Island-Wide Scale: Planning for the Civic District and the New Towns . . .	182
7.2.3	Public Sculptures Employed for Urban Renewal	183
7.3	First Stages of the Organization of the Colonial Civic District	185
7.4	The Civic District and Public Sculptures Master Plans	186
7.4.1	Esplanade Park from Colonial Public Walk to Heritage Trail	190
7.4.2	Fort Canning Park: Shaping of National History and Identity, Provision of Educational Resources, Tourism Attraction	193
7.4.3	Istana Park: Identity Gateway	198
7.4.4	Hong Lim Park: The British Commons	199
7.4.5	Telok Ayer Green: Developing a Narrative of the Past with Use of Sculptural Works	201
7.4.6	Mount Emily Park: Story of Reservoirs and Public Pools	202
7.4.7	Pearl's Hill City Park: City Views and Water Management	204
7.5	Conclusions	205
	References	207
8	Singapore's Green Infrastructure and Biophilic Urbanism	211
8.1	Introduction	211
8.2	Overview of Western Policies Applied in Singapore's Context	213
8.2.1	Singapore's Green Infrastructure Concept and its Representation	214

8.2.2	Biophilic Urbanism: the Evolution of the Green Infrastructure Concept and the Vertical Garden City . . .	216
8.2.3	Biodiversity Design and the Tropical Aesthetics	217
8.3	Urban Planning: a Green Infrastructure at the Island-Wide Scale	220
8.3.1	Connecting and Visualizing Parks into an Ecological, Cultural and Social Infrastructure: The Park Connector Network	224
8.4	Singapore's History of Urban Water Management	228
8.4.1	Design of Parks at a Regional Scale: The Riverine Parks	230
8.5	The Evolution of the Green Infrastructure Concept: Biophilic Urbanism	233
8.6	Biophilic Planning and Design at the New Town Scale	235
8.7	Upgrade of the New Town Model in Punggol with Adoption of the Eco-Precinct Concept and Waterway Park: Social Engagement, Ecological Enhancement and a Review of History	237
8.8	Re-imagining the Coastal-Sea Life: Planning and Design of Pasir Ris New Town and Its Parks with a Marine Theme . . .	242
8.8.1	Sea Shell Park: a Neighbourhood Park Defines with Sculptural Works the Site-Specific Theme for the Town	243
8.8.2	Ecological Restoration of the Town's Water Canals into Park Connectors	244
8.9	Conclusions	245
	References	249
9	The Singapore Playground: System of Themed Public Parks that Addresses Environmental, Social and Cultural Sustainability	253
9.1	Introduction	253
9.2	Overview of Western Policies Applied in Singapore's Context	255
9.2.1	A Theme Park Framework	255
9.2.2	The Link Between Narrative, Theming and Constructions of Nation	257
9.2.3	Post-Traditional Urban Design	259
9.3	The Development of a Singaporean Park System: The 'Singapore Playground'	260

9.4	Reoccurring Thematics in the ‘Singapore Playground’ Concept	264
9.4.1	The Attitude Towards ‘History’ Demonstrated in the Representation, Reconstruction, and Reinterpretation of the Artifacts of the Past	264
9.4.2	The ‘Actors’ that Participate in the Construction of Urban Green Spaces Understood as Construction of Meaning in Public Space	265
9.4.3	The Inscription of Changing Conceptions of Public Park in the Built Environment	265
9.4.4	The Attitude Towards ‘Nature’: The Dichotomy Between Nature Understood as a Biological Phenomena and Nature Understood as a Socially Constructed Artefact	266
9.5	The Attitude Towards ‘History’: Development of Colonial Green Belt into Post-Colonial Recreational and Ecological Infrastructure: The Scenic Walk of the Southern Ridges	268
9.5.1	Implementation of a Scenic Park: Mount Faber and Kent Ridge	270
9.5.2	Commodification of Heritage: Telok Blangah Hill Park	275
9.5.3	Building a Large Recreational Infrastructure at the City Scale: the Southern Ridges	276
9.6	The Actors Taken into Consideration for the Construction of Meaning: Participatory Planning and Community Participation	279
9.6.1	Community Gardening	281
9.6.2	The Re-Purposing of Derelict/Post Industrial Lands: Singapore’s Rail Corridor	282
9.7	The Inscription of Changing Conceptions of Public Park in the Built Environment: from Asian ‘Multiculturalism’ to a Globalized Tropical Aesthetics	288
9.7.1	Building a Narrative to Display Asian Values: Marina City Park	289
9.7.2	Showcase of Tropicality in Contemporary High-Tech Assemblage of Green Architectures: Gardens by the Bay	292
9.8	Nature and Tropicality. Colonial Construct Referencing Nineteenth Century Representations of Southeast Asian Landscapes: Jurong Bird Park	293
9.9	From a Representation of Nature to a Reconstruction of Nature	296

9.9.1	Colonial Representation of Nature: Macritchie Reservoir Park	298
9.9.2	Post-Colonial Park Design that Communicates Water-Based Themes and Social Memory: Macritchie Reservoir ‘Biophilic’ Park	300
9.9.3	Postmodern Representations of Nature: Bishan-Ang Mo Kio Park	302
9.9.4	Contemporary Reconstructions of Nature: Biophilic Bishan-Ang Mo Kio Park	306
9.10	Contextualizing Nature Reserves in their Historical Evolution . .	310
9.10.1	Colonial Nature: Scientific Enquiry and Education, Public Recreation, and Functional Water-Infrastructure	310
9.10.2	Post-Colonial Nature: Scientific Enquiry and Education, Public Recreation, Protection of Biodiversity, and Nature as Spectacle and Tourism Attraction	312
9.10.3	Nature Designed as a Spectacle: The MacRitchie Reserve	316
9.10.4	Augmented Bird-Sanctuary: Peeping at Wetlands’ Flora and Fauna	318
9.10.5	The Nature Sanctuary: Preservation of the Unique Asset of Singapore Primary Forest with Buffer Zones Themed as Nature and History Trails	319
9.10.6	A Park Themed to Display the Connection Between Tropical Nature and War History: Labrador Park and Nature Reserve	320
	References	324
10	Conclusions: the Contribution of Singapore’s Park System to the Debate on Post-Independence and Post-Colonial Constructions of Nation	329
10.1	Singapore’s Evolving Urban Imaging Strategies in Green Provision as Reflections of Post-Colonial Constructions of Nation	331
10.1.1	The ‘Colonial Strategy’	331
10.1.2	The Modernist ‘Functional Strategy’	333
10.1.3	The ‘Identity Strategy’	334
10.1.4	Green Infrastructure and Biophilic Urbanism	338
10.1.5	The Singapore Playground	340
	References	345
	Index	347