

Contents

- 1 The Return of the Flâneur — 1
- 2 Flânerie and its Discontents — 13
 - 2.1 The History of the Flâneur as a Literary Trope — 14
 - 2.2 Walter Benjamin's Continuum of Strolling — 32
 - 2.3 Flânerie and/as Performance — 44
 - 2.4 Flânerie and Other Media: A Brief History of Flânerie and Intermediality — 51
 - 2.5 Excursus: Flânerie sans la lettre: The Flâneur in the Anglophone Literary Tradition — 54
 - 2.6 Synopsis: The Aesthetics of the Flânerie Text — 66
- 3 Michel Foucault's Ethics of the Self — 69
 - 3.1 The Aesthetics of Existence — 72
 - 3.2 The Techniques of the Self — 75
 - 3.2.1 Writing the Self — 75
 - 3.2.2 Reflexivity and Truth-Speaking — 79
 - 3.3 The Subject of Experience — 83
- 4 Judith Butler's Precarious Subjects — 88
 - 4.1 Discourse and Materialization — 88
 - 4.2 Sovereign Melancholia and Resistance as "Promiscuous Obedience" — 90
 - 4.3 Precarious Subjects — 94
- 5 Synopsis: Ethical Subjects and the Flânerie Text — 105
- 6 The End of Flânerie? The Sovereign Subject and Precarious City Life in Ian McEwan's Saturday — 111
 - 6.1 A Flâneur without Flânerie: Henry Perowne as Benjaminian 'Man of the Crowd' — 111
 - 6.2 Technologies of Domination in Saturday: The Flâneur as Sovereign Subject — 116
 - 6.3 Precarious City Life: Ambiguous Transformations — 120
 - 6.4 Precarious Interpretations: Strolling through the Memory Space of Literature — 126

7	Flânerie as Technique of the Self — 132
7.1	Precarious Flânerie in Siri Hustvedt's The Blindfold — 132
7.1.1	Streetwalking the Metropolis: The Female Gaze and the City — 134
7.1.2	Flânerie as Resistance in The Blindfold — 139
7.1.3	The Logic of "War and Struggle": Discourse, Power and parrësia in The Blindfold — 150
7.2	Precarious Truth-Speaking in Teju Cole's Open City — 166
7.2.1	Traveler, Migrant and Nomad: The Triple Dilemma of the Post-colonial Flâneur — 167
7.2.2	Representation and Knowledge-Formation in Open City — 172
7.2.3	Flânerie as Technique of the Self in Open City — 176
7.2.4	Truthfulness and parrësia in Open City — 184
7.2.5	Parrësiastic Aesthetics of Existence: Truthfulness and Critique in Open City — 195
8	City Matters: Affect and Media in Precarious Performances of Subjectivity — 203
8.1	Performing the City: Precarious Ethical Subjects in Dionne Brand's What We All Long For — 203
8.1.1	The City as Fluid Materiality: Affects, Matter and Textuality in What We All Long For — 206
8.1.2	(Un-)Grievable Lives: Global and Local Structures of Power in What We All Long For — 210
8.1.3	Metropolitan Aesthetics of Existence: Encounters with the Precarious City — 224
8.1.4	City of Longing and Belonging: Affect and Identity in What We All Long For — 236
8.2	Turning Film into Scripture: Intermedial Encounters in Robin Robertson's The Long Take — 242
8.2.1	The Ultimate Flânerie Text: Formal Peculiarities and the Aesthetics of Transgression in The Long Take — 243
8.2.2	"A Way to Lose More Slowly": Flânerie as a Technique of the Self in The Long Take — 250
8.2.3	History Repeating Itself? Precariousness and Circular Performances of Sovereignty in The Long Take — 255
8.2.4	The Aestheticization of City Life: Film Noir and the Tradition of Flânerie in The Long Take — 262
9	Conclusion — 270

Works Cited — 278

Index — 296