

Table of Contents

Preface	vii
Introduction
Why Plato composed the Sophist	1
PART ONE
THE DEFINITION OF A SOPHIST (216A–236C, 264D–268D)
The introductory conversation (216A–218E)	4
Dialectic and the method of collection and division	8
The definition of an angler (218E–221B)	15
The first five definitions of a sophist (221C–A)	16
The sixth definition (226A–231B)	17
The final definition (232B–236D, 264D–268D)	19
PART TWO
THE OBJECTION OF A SOPHIST (236C–264D)
The interpretation of to mē on and ouk estin	23
How there can be many beings	25
The objection to the classification of a sophist (236D–237A)	27
How and why we can think and speak of a non-being	29
The objection to non-being (237B–239C)	33
How the difficulties arise for the account of an image (239C–240C)	36

How the difficulties arise for the account of false belief (240D–241C).....	38
Why being is other than other beings (249D–250E).....	39
The objection to being (249D–250E).....	51
The reply to the objection to being (251A–254B).....	54
The otherness of the other greatest kinds (254B–255E).....	57
The proof that being is a non-being (255E–257A).....	60
The proof that non-being is a being (257B–258C).....	63
Summary of argument and call to abandon sophistry (258C–260D)	65
The proof that there are falsehoods and images (260D–264D).....	66
Notes to the Commentary	70
Translation	75
Notes to the Translation	136
Bibliography	143