

Contents

Illustrations 13

Preface 17

Acknowledgments 23

1. Deschooling the School: John Dewey’s Theory of Curriculum and Instruction 25

1. First theoretical considerations—Dewey’s letters to Clara Mitchell 28

2. The psychological and the sociological—traditionalists and Herbartians as opponents 32

3. The logical as the third didactic element—the public controversy with William T. Harris 39

4. Student freedom versus teacher guidance—the covert conflict with George P. Brown 44

5. Problem versus project—the unexpected dispute with William H. Kilpatrick 50

6. The pragmatist as idealist—some critical remarks 56

2. The Child and the Community: John Dewey’s Education for Democracy 65

1. Democracy in politics and society 67

2. Democracy in school and education 72

3. Social studies and the issue of indoctrination 82

4. Democracy at the Laboratory School 85

5. The conflict between private interests and political conviction 93

6. Negative freedom, social integration, and the new individualism 96

3. Theory versus Practice: The Laboratory School on Trial	109
1. Reading and writing—problems and potentials	112
2. Arithmetic—an innovative concept with a hitch	120
3. Science—success within limits	130
4. History—the intricacies of change	137
5. The Laboratory School—a progressive experiment among others	148
 4. The Long Course of History: John Dewey and the Maxim “Learning by Doing”	 161
1. Aristotle, Comenius, Froebel—the three classics	161
2. Francis W. Parker and his campaign for “learning by doing”	165
3. John Dewey—the new figurehead of the movement	169
4. Historical amnesia—a worldwide phenomenon	174
 5. John Dewey’s Part: The Origin and Meaning of “Social Efficiency”	 181
1. Benjamin Kidd and the origin of social efficiency	185
2. John Hobson, Lester Ward, and the humanitarian approach	189
3. Social efficiency as the main aim of education before 1905	193
4. William Bagley, David Snedden, and the high tide of social efficiency	197
5. Dewey and the magic triangle	200
6. Social efficiency, democracy, and empowerment	205
 6. “Two Roads to Culture”: The Dewey–Kerschensteiner Controversy about Vocational and General Education	 215
1. Kerschensteiner’s lectures in the United States	218
2. The continuation school and its American friends	224

3. Dewey's criticism of the Munich system	229
4. Vocational and general education—two complementary models	234
7. John Dewey on Maria Montessori: A Research Note	245
1. Kilpatrick's assessment of the Montessori Method	246
2. Dewey's review of Kilpatrick's manuscript	249
3. Alice and Evelyn in Rome and Montessori in Schools of Tomorrow .	253
4. Dewey's blind spots and the gender question	257
8. John Dewey as Administrator: The Inglorious End of the Laboratory School	263
1. William Harper and John Dewey—the two founders	268
2. The Cook County Normal School—the Mecca of progressive educators	269
3. Dewey versus Harper—the quarrel over funds	271
4. Francis W. Parker—the veteran as competitor	273
5. Harper's plan—the merger of two elementary schools	276
6. Dewey as victor—the rescue of the Laboratory School	278
7. Alice Dewey—the wife as principal	281
8. Changing names—from the University Elementary to the Laboratory School	283
9. Dewey as administrator—the School of Education in crisis	285
10. Declining enrollment—the Laboratory School on the brink	287
11. Dewey's solution—the hostile takeover of the Parker School	289
12. Alice Dewey as principal—resistance from all quarters	291
13. Harper's compromise—a wasted opportunity	294
14. Dewey's resignation—the way out of a deadlock	298

15. A pragmatist’s dilemma—theory as passion and practice as burden	302
16. Dewey as an autocrat—blunders with the merger	305
17. Hasty flight and protective coloration—a conclusion	307
 9. Alice Dewey’s Legacy: The Origin and Purpose of Mayhew and Edwards’ Classic “The Dewey School”	317
1. Alice Dewey initiates the project	318
2. Margaret Naumburg and Lucy Mitchell decline cooperation	321
3. Katherine Camp Mayhew comes into play	323
4. John Dewey gets involved	325
5. Dewey’s fight against traditionalists and sentimentalists	326
6. Anna Camp Edwards takes the lead	328
7. John Dewey comes to the rescue	331
8. Marion Pigman and John Childs as teammates	333
9. Evelyn Dewey has the final say	336
10. Idealization and colored information as politics of history	339
 References	351
 Name Index	403