

Table of Contents

1 Introduction	11
2 The Meaning of Emotions	21
2.1 Modern Day Views on Emotions	21
2.2 Emotions in Antiquity	38
2.2.1 Plato and the Academy	40
2.2.2 Aristotle and the Peripatos	43
2.2.3 The Stoics	46
2.2.4 The Epicureans	49
2.2.5 Conclusion	51
3 Allusions, Intertextuality, and Literary Genre	53
3.1 Allusions	53
3.2 Intertextuality	60
3.3 Literary Genre	68
4 Sea Storm and Landing on the Shore of Africa	71
4.1 How to Enter a Poem and to Suffer Shipwreck Epically	71
4.2 The Sea Storm off Crete: How to Weather a Storm Without Being Afraid	95
4.3 Facing Death on High Seas: Philosophical Implications	110
4.4 Conclusions: Between Heroism and Cowardice	122
5 Aeneas' Encounter with His Mother	125
5.1 Meeting Family on Foreign Shores	125
5.2 Feelings of Younger People	140
5.3 Conclusions: The Son and His Mother	144
6 Aeneas' Arrival in Carthage	146
6.1 Luck and Jealousy	146

6.2 Emulation vs. Envy: Intending also to Have, but not to Take Away What Somebody Else Owns	151
6.3 Conclusions: Seeing Carthage – Between Jealousy and Inspiration	156
7 The Temple in Carthage	159
7.1 Observing and Reacting to Pictures and Stories	159
7.2 Towards an Implicit Poetics of the Aeneid	171
7.3 Conclusions: How to Read Epic Poetry	186
8 The Helen Episode	192
8.1 Divine Interventions in Times of Dire Emotional Distress	192
8.2 The Apollonian and Vergilian Transformation and Use of This Type of Scene	206
8.3 Therapy and the Prevention of Acratic Acts	214
8.4 Conclusions: Outside Counseling	221
9 The Final Duel	223
9.1 Prelude: The Opposite Counterpart of the Helen Episode	223
9.2 On the Right Treatment of One's Enemies and Their Corpses	227
9.3 Keeping the Faith: The Right Kind of Anger	256
9.4 Conclusions: Roman Ethics and Turnus' False Lessons from Iliadic History	271
10 Aeneas and His Emotions	277
Abbreviations	284
Bibliography	285
Index locorum	326