

Contents

1	Overview	1
1.1	Introduction	1
1.2	Hipsters and (other) Countercultures Through the Ages	4
1.3	Research So Far	15
1.4	Backdrop of Hipsterism Today—A Theoretical Framework	22
1.4.1	Hipsterism as Modernity	22
1.4.2	Hipsterism as Consumption	25
1.4.3	Hipster Capitalism	28
2	Methodology and Methods	35
2.1	Methodology	35
2.1.1	Ethnographic Approach	37
2.1.2	Emergent Design and Emerging Methods	38
2.2	Data Collection	39
2.2.1	Access to the Field and Self-reflection	39
2.2.2	Ethnographic Imaginary and Mapping the Field	42
2.3	Data Analysis: The Conceptual Triad	47
2.3.1	Space as a Tool	47
2.3.2	Lefebvres Triad	50
3	The Space of Hipsterism—The Paradox of Being and Doing	55
3.1	Cultural Capital and Hipsterism as Creativity	59
3.2	Enslaved or Uninspired—the Hipster Antitype	70
3.3	Do-What-You-Love—A Process of Transition	89
3.3.1	Do-What-You-Love	91
3.3.2	Coffee Culture and the Practice of Fetishisation	93
3.3.3	Freedom and Choices to Do-What-You-Love	96

3.3.4	The Process of Transition—Life Course in Hipsterism and Success and Failure	100
3.3.5	Spaces of Ambiguity	114
3.4	Access and Boundaries—Mapping Hipsterism	116
3.4.1	Narrowing Down Hipsterism—A “colourful” Kreuzkölln	117
3.4.2	Labelling, Distinction and Implicit Criticism—An Embarrassing Affair	129
3.5	Interim Conclusion	138
4	From Individuality to Imagined Global Citizenship	143
4.1	Conceptual Framework within Hipsterism	145
4.1.1	Beliefs—or the Idea of a “Good” or “Just” Society	145
4.1.2	Individualism and Collective Action	150
4.1.3	Mistrust in Institutions and Politics	154
4.1.4	Implicit Understanding of Human Nature	158
4.2	Individualism and Citizenship: Two Analytical Categories	163
4.3	A Pattern of Action	166
4.3.1	Collective Individualised Action	166
4.3.2	Conscious Consumption	168
4.3.3	Consistent Consumption as a Lifestyle—A New Form of Citizenship?	174
5	Conclusion	181
	Bibliography	189