

Contents

Christoph Bernhardt, Monika Motylińska

Global Entanglements of Socialist Architecture and Planning in the Cold War Period – Approaches and Perspectives — 1

I Soviet Transfer: Strategies and Limits

Susanne Stein

Between ‘Self-Sovietisation’ and Soviet Assistance: Urban Planning and Design in China, 1950s–1960s — 21

Nikolay Erofeev, Łukasz Stanek

Integrate, Adapt, Collaborate: Concerns of Comecon’s Technical Assistance to Mongolia during the Cold War — 43

Mariya Petrova, Jonas van der Straeten

Prefabricating Uzbekistan? Discourses and Realities of Urban Redevelopment in Tashkent and Samarkand under Soviet Rule — 73

II Networks: Comecon, GDR and the “Global South”

Monika Motylińska

A Cuban Nickel Plant made in the GDR? The Architecture of a Comecon Joint Venture — 103

Anne-Kristin Hartmetz

Between Factory and Fiction – Planning and Implementation of Agro-Industrial Development Projects in Ghana in Cooperation with CMEA Countries, 1960–1966 — 123

Rachel Lee

Of Mobility and Earth: Hannah Schreckenbach’s Engagements with Indigenous Architectures in Ghana — 143

Franziska Klemstein

Stralsund – More than Exchange of Experiences — 165

III Media, Perceptions and Afterlives of Socialist Architecture and Planning

Jasna Galjer

Architecture of International Zagreb Fair between the East and West — 189

Andreas Butter

Shell Sheds for China: Exported Industrial Architecture from the GDR – Intentions and Reception — 211

Paul Sprute

Settlements of Post-Socialist Development? Reconstructing East German Solidarity through Housing Projects in the Global South after 1990 — 241

Christina Schwenkel

The Afterlife of Architectural Aid to Vietnam: A View from the Global South — 267

About the Authors — 289