

Contents

Introduction: The complex analogy between social appearance and stylistic presentation and the provocations to cultural self-awareness played out in Euripides' Electra — 1

- I      The initial presentation of the Old Man: Characterization and stylistic presentation of an oddly mundane, even anti-heroic, tragic character — 7
- II     The initial presentation of Orestes: Appearance, eugeneia, and social expectations about character and agency — 22
- III    Orestes, eugeneia, and aesthetic expectations about heroic characterization and agency — 44
- IV    Achilles and the first stasimon: Stylistic effect and the “appearance” of an heroic character — 53
- V     The Old Man again: The Kunstsprache and character construction — 59
- VI    The Kunstsprache, defamiliarization, and the metapoetics of character construction — 69
- VII   The Old Man and Orestes: The problem of eugeneia in the second episode — 78
- VIII   Metapoetics in the abortive first section of the recognition scene — 87
- IX    The recognition proper: the kharaktēr of tragic heroes — 106
- X     Unquestioned assumptions and the aesthetics of valuation: What can be made of this Orestes? — 115

Conclusion: Cultural context and tradition: Continuity of substance and appearance and the basis of the complex analogy — 134

Works cited — 144

Subject index — 157