

Table of Contents

|                                                           |    |
|-----------------------------------------------------------|----|
| Preface                                            | 9  |
| Note on References and Abbreviations                      | 9  |
| Part I                                             |    |
| The Sources of the Medieval Doctrine of the Topics | 11 |
| A. Aristotle's Works on the Topics                        | 13 |
| 1. Introductory                                           | 13 |
| Notes                                                     | 14 |
| 2. Dialectic                                              | 15 |
| Notes                                                     | 19 |
| 3. Aristotle's Concept of Locus                           | 20 |
| Notes                                                     | 28 |
| 4. The Contents of Aristotle's Topics              | 30 |
| Notes                                                     | 33 |
| 5. Demonstrative Science                                  | 34 |
| Notes                                                     | 36 |
| 6. The Period from Aristotle to Boethius                  | 37 |
| Notes                                                     | 38 |
| B. Boethius' Works on the Topics                          | 39 |
| 1. Introductory                                           | 39 |
| Notes                                                     | 40 |
| 2. The Contents of the De Differentiis Topicis     | 41 |
| Notes                                                     | 58 |
| 3. Boethius' Concept of Locus                             | 60 |
| Notes                                                     | 64 |
| 4. The Function of the Loci in Arguments                  | 66 |
| Notes                                                     | 71 |
| 5. The Nature and Division of the Loci                    | 73 |
| Notes                                                     | 77 |
| 6. Conditionals, Hypothetical Syllogisms, and the Loci    | 78 |
| Notes                                                     | 81 |

|                                                                                                  |     |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Part II                                                                                   |     |
| The Medieval Approach to the Sources                                                      | 83  |
| A. Aristotle's Topics                                                                     | 85  |
| 1. Introductory                                                                                  | 85  |
| 2. Survey of the Medieval Commentaries on Aristotle's Topics                              | 87  |
| Notes                                                                                            | 92  |
| 3. A Commentator on Aristotle's Topics ?                                                  | 94  |
| Notes                                                                                            | 98  |
| 4. The Structure and Contents of Aristotle's Topics                                       | 99  |
| Notes                                                                                            | 105 |
| 5. Aristotle Interpreted Through Boethius.                                                       |     |
| Intrinsic and Extrinsic Loci in Aristotle's Topics                                        | 107 |
| Notes                                                                                            | 111 |
| 6. The Predicate-Types and Their Additions                                                       | 113 |
| Notes                                                                                            | 116 |
| 7. The Predicate-Types Versus the Predicables                                                    | 118 |
| Notes                                                                                            | 121 |
| B. Boethius' De Differentiis Topicis                                                      | 123 |
| 1. Survey of the Commentaries on Boethius' De Differentiis Topicis                        | 123 |
| Notes                                                                                            | 126 |
| C. The University Teaching                                                                       | 127 |
| 1. The Treatment of the Topics in Medieval Textbooks                                             | 127 |
| Notes                                                                                            | 129 |
| 2. The Division of Logic into a Part of Discovering Arguments and another Part of Assessing them | 130 |
| Notes                                                                                            | 132 |

|                                                      |     |
|------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Part III                                      |     |
| The Doctrine of the Topics in the Middle Ages | 135 |
| A. Introductory                                      | 137 |
| Note                                                 | 138 |
| B. The Earliest Texts                                | 139 |
| 1. Works from St. Gall. Abbo of Fleury               | 139 |
| Notes                                                | 145 |

|                                                               |     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 2. The Oldest Commentaries on Boethius'                       |     |
| De Differentiis Topicis                                | 147 |
| Notes                                                         | 152 |
| 3. Garlandus Compotista                                       | 154 |
| Notes                                                         | 159 |
| 4. Summary Remarks                                            | 160 |
| Notes                                                         | 162 |
| C. The 12th Century                                           | 163 |
| 1. The Nature of the Locus                                    | 163 |
| Notes                                                         | 186 |
| 2. The Loci and the Various Species of Arguments              | 189 |
| Notes                                                         | 201 |
| 3. The Loci and Conditional Sentences                         | 203 |
| Notes                                                         | 209 |
| 4. Maxims and Axioms. Dialectical and Demonstrative Arguments | 211 |
| Notes                                                         | 215 |
| 5. The Division and the Number of the Loci                    | 216 |
| Notes                                                         | 218 |
| 6. Summary Remarks                                            | 220 |
| D. The 13th Century                                           | 223 |
| 1. The Status of the Loci                                     | 223 |
| Notes                                                         | 241 |
| 2. The Various Species of Loci                                | 244 |
| Notes                                                         | 251 |
| 3. The Loci in Syllogisms                                     | 253 |
| Notes                                                         | 261 |
| 4. Summary Remarks                                            | 263 |
| E. The Topics and the Theory of Consequences                  | 265 |
| Notes                                                         | 295 |
| F. The 14th Century                                           | 301 |
| 1. Loci and Dialectic                                         | 301 |
| Notes                                                         | 307 |
| 2. Dialectical Arguments                                      | 309 |
| Notes                                                         | 313 |
| 3. The List of the Loci                                       | 314 |
| Notes                                                         | 318 |

|                                                             |     |
|-------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 4. Summary Remarks                                          | 319 |
| G. The 15th Century                                         | 321 |
| Notes                                                       | 331 |
| Part IV                                              |     |
| General Conclusion                                   | 335 |
| Appendices                                           | 345 |
| Appendix 1: Selection of Unprinted Texts                    | 347 |
| 1. Anon., Top. Bo. "Primum oportet" (B. 3)                  | 347 |
| 2. Anon., Top. Bo. "Boethius intendit" (B. 1)               | 348 |
| 3. Anon., Top. Bo. "Supplementa" (B. 11)                    | 351 |
| 4. Anon., Top. Bo. "Quoniam in hoc" (B. 9)                  | 352 |
| 5. Anon., Top. Bo. "Quae sit" (B. 15)                       | 353 |
| 6. Anon., Top. Bo. "Quae sit" (B. 15)                       | 355 |
| 7. Anon., Top. Bo. "Praemittit Boethius" (B. 14)            | 357 |
| 8. Lisboa-Robert, Top. Ar. (A. 7)                           | 359 |
| 9. Oxford-Robert, Top. Ar. (A. 10)                          | 361 |
| 10. Oxford-Robert, Top. Ar. (A. 10)                         | 361 |
| 11. Nicolaus Parisiensis, Top. Bo. (B. 20)                  | 363 |
| 12. Nicolaus Parisiensis, Top. Bo. (B. 20)                  | 363 |
| 13. Anon., Top. Bo. "Cum scientia respective" (B. 19)       | 364 |
| 14. Simon de Faverisham, PHcom                              | 364 |
| 15. Radulphus Brito, Top. Ar. (A. 20)                       | 365 |
| 16. Iohannes Buridanus, Top. Ar. (A. 21)                    | 369 |
| 17. Petrus Richeri, Top. Ar. (A. 37)                        | 374 |
| 18. Anon., Top. Ar. "Quaeritur circa" (A. 61)               | 379 |
| Appendix 2: List of Commentaries                            | 381 |
| A. Commentaries on Aristotle's Topics                | 383 |
| B. Commentaries on Boethius' De Differentiis Topicis | 418 |
| References                                           | 433 |
| A. Medieval Sources                                         | 433 |
| B. Modern Literature                                        | 442 |
| Index                                                       | 449 |
| Summary in Danish                                           | 455 |