

Contents

Introduction	1
1. The place of language critique in the history of modern philosophy	10
2. Language as factual a priori of thought: J. G. Hamann	21
3. Philosophy as linguistic analysis: G. Chr. Lichtenberg	27
4. Language critique as enlightenment and liberation: A. v. Einsiedel	34
5. Critique of language as metacritique of reason: J. G. Herder	46
6. Germans and Britons: Bacon's importance for philosophy as critique of language	53
7. Language and thought as identical twins: F. H. Jacobi	62
8. The interdependence of language and thought: K. L. Reinhold	67
9. Analytic empiricism versus metaphysics: Ö. F. Gruppe	78
10. Analytic aspects in Marx' attitude towards religion	110
11. The linguistic turn in Kierkegaard's attack on Hegel	125
12. Language as condition and limitation of thought: C. Hermann	138
13. Thought acts and speech acts: G. Gerber	147
14. A German analyst in nineteenth-century Oxford: F. M. Müller	163
15. Language-critical philosophy with a monistic foundation: L. Noire	180
16. Indebted to Kant and Schopenhauer: G. Runze	199
17. All philosophy is critique of language — in the sense of F. Mauthner	215
18. Review and conclusion	239
Index of names	259
Index of subjects	263